66 migrant youths housed in Chicago

Durbin visits shelter; agency says trying to reunite families like ‘a scavenger hunt’

By TONY BRISCOE
Chicago Tribune

A Chicago nonprofit said Friday it is housing 66 migrant children who have been separated from their parents in the past six weeks under the federal government’s “zero tolerance” policy.

Evelyn Diaz, president of Heartland Alliance, welcomed U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin for a visit to one of the organization’s nine shelters accommodating the children who have been removed from their parents’ care after entering the country. Heartland, which provides housing and legal assistance to immigrants, said the 66 migrant children are among 451 minors staying in Heartland facilities. Diaz said Heartland is licensed by the Illinois Department of Human Services to shelter 512.

Durbin said he met with a 17-year-old girl from Guatemala and her 7-month-old daughter who made a five-day journey to reach the U.S.-Mexico border. He also spoke with a 6-year-old girl from Africa who has picked up some English and Spanish while staying in the Chicago shelter.

Durbin’s staff gave the children cards made by kids in the U.S. that had hand-drawn pictures and messages of encouragement.

“It’s interesting to see these children up close, and to realize some one-third of them are under

Outcry over a license plate

Owner says he had no idea state-assigned number had Nazi ties

By MATTHEW WALBERG
Chicago Tribune

There was a palpable sense of shock in the voice of the man when he was told his Illinois license plate contains a symbolic number used by white supremacists.

“I had no idea that ... I had no idea,” the man said, tripping over his words during a telephone conversation with a Tribune reporter. “I am completely blown away, blown away and a little terrified. Because that is definitely not me by any stretch of the imagination. ... Holy (expletive)!”

On Tuesday, Twitter user @petegaines posted a picture on the social network of the license plate “1488” and questioned why the state issued it.

“Hey @ILSecOfState why do you allow Nazis to get Nazi slogans on their Tesla’s personalized license plates?” @petegaines tweeted.

That number is a combination of two figures celebrated by white supremacists.

The first two digits stand for “14 Words” and references the slogan, “We must secure the existence of our people and a future for white children.”

The next two digits, 8 and 8, represent the eighth letter in the English language — H — and when put together are meant to stand for “Heil Hitler.”

In an email to the Tribune, Pete Gaines defended his tweet.

“Regardless of whether or not someone espouses a white supremacist ideology, in an era where Nazis, fascists and racists have been emboldened to publicly and proudly display their hatred, driving around with a number that both the Anti-Defamation League and

Judge orders release pending promised retrial after Burge-era conviction tossed

By MEGAN CREPEAU
Chicago Tribune

Jackie Wilson, one of two brothers convicted in one of Chicago’s most infamous cop killings, walked out of Cook County Jail on Friday, a free man for the first time in more than 36 years.

The sudden freedom for Wilson, 57, came after Cook County Circuit Judge William Hooks ordered his release a few hours earlier. The judge had tossed out his murder conviction last week after finding that notorious ex-Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge and detectives under his command had physically coerced his confession.

Saying nearly four decades in prison had aged Wilson “far beyond his chronological age,” Hooks held Friday that he did not pose a danger to the community or a risk to flee — factors in whether he could be released.

The judge also said special prosecutors “utterly failed” in their arguments to keep Wilson in jail, adding that they appeared to want him to view the case “through the lens of a court sitting in 1982 or 1988 without considering the revelations that have come to light over the last three decades.”

Scores of African-American men have accused Burge, who is white, and his colleagues of torturing or abusing them during the 1970s and 1980s at a South Side police station. The scandal has stained the city’s reputation and cost taxpayers at least $115 million so far in lawsuit settlements, judgments and other compensation to victims.

Lewis stepping down as CTU president

Health issues keep her from giving best, she says; seeing Emanuel ousted remains key goal

By JUAN PEREZ JR.
Chicago Tribune

Karen Lewis, the firebrand president of the Chicago Teachers Union, says she’s stepping down from her post atop one of the region’s most formidable labor unions.

The union president said Friday that she had submitted her retirement papers as an educator to the Chicago Board of Education, weeks after undergoing brain surgery as part of ongoing treatment for a 2014 cancer diagnosis that forced her to abandon a mayoral bid.

ABEL URIBE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2016

Karen Lewis, the teachers union leader since 2010, was diagnosed with brain cancer in 2014 and has been struggling with health issues since.

“It’s just the health situation,” Lewis told the Tribune. “I can’t do it at my best.

“I want my members to know first that I’m not abandoning with me.”

Lewis said she also planned to be involved with the city’s upcoming mayoral election, and she revived her past criticism of Mayor Rahm Emanuel as he faces a crowded field of challengers.

“My plan is to try to get somebody to unseat Rahm,” she said. “I think we can do better than that.”

Union officials did not respond to requests for comment. Lewis’ health has been a fiercely private concern for the union president and her family, though she’s been on medical leave from her CTU duties.

In a letter to union members, Lewis said she “will be engaging with my fellow CTU officers and members about our direction forward over the months ahead and

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

CTU President Karen Lewis, who led a seven-day strike in 2012, said she is proud to have united teachers over the years.

Fiery leader led teachers through some difficult times

will be communicating with you in the coming days."

The union president's official role is to supervise the body, preside over internal meetings and lead contract negotiations with the school board.

Lewis crafted a public persona that matched the union's shift into a populist force for minorities and the poor, one that targeted banks and billionaires and jammed Loop streets in its quest to shape how public education is delivered in one of the nation's largest school systems.

"We have changed the political landscape in this city and in this state," she told the Tribune in a brief interview Friday. "We are trying make sure we have an opportunity to make decisions and be in a position that when decisions are made, the union — not just our union but all unions — have an opportunity to be relevant in how policy goes in the city."

Lewis, 64, taught chemistry for almost 20 years at Sullivan High School and later Lane Tech College Prep and King College Prep High School.

In 2010 she won the union presidency after a runoff election against incumbent Marilyn Stewart. Two years later, Lewis led a seven-day strike that broke a quarter-century of relative labor peace between the CTU and the city and underscored smoldering national debates over the reform of public education.

She was elected to a second, three-year term as union president in May 2013, then geared up for what many expected to be a competitive challenge to Emanuel before a malignant brain tumor derailed her prospective campaign.

"I do think that if Karen's health hadn't gone south, if she hadn't been diagnosed with this brain tumor, there were very, very strong indications this fiery, social justice-driven, African-American union leader would've of those dominant, powerful influential people in the city."

Emanuel, in a statement, said: "I've seen firsthand the tenacity and drive that makes Karen Lewis a worthy advocate for Chicago children and teachers, and we've grown to admire each other as friends. Karen may be stepping down from her position at CTU, but I know she'll never stop fighting for Chicago's children."

Chicago Public Schools CEO Janice Jackson, who sat across from Lewis in high-profile contract nego-

I'm doing pretty well considering that this is a very aggressive disease, and I've already outlived what most people do who have it."

Lewis said that according to her surgeon, her cancer was likely to return and that she'll continue undergoing chemotherapy.

Lewis' formal departure from her teaching role comes as the union faces declining membership, internal political divisions, questions about its finances and changes to the roles of some of its trusted leaders. She said such complications are "not anything new."

"And I think the thing I can be most proud of is, when I started in 2010, our union was extraordinarily divided. I think one of the things we were able to do was unite people to help solve some of the biggest problems.

"I think we did a good job with that, and I'm most proud of that. But I'm also proud people all over the country want to understand our way of doing things, our democratic processes. I think that's extremely important," Lewis said.

The union's constitution says that the body's vice president — currently Jesse Sharkey — "shall assume the duties of the president in the absence or disability of the president."

Sharkey and other members of Lewis' leadership team face election next year.

"We have changed the political landscape in this city and in this state."

become the mayor of the city of Chicago," said Robert Bruno, a professor at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign's School of Labor and Employment Relations who has closely studied the CTU.

"Karen at peak health and also peak performance is certainly someone who is very very difficult to replace," Bruno said. "But, given the unfortunate health issues that challenged her, her role was greatly diminished. The symbolic power and the integrity and credibility of Karen Lewis sort of dwarfs any other political, labor, nonprofit corporate leadership in the city. She was one tiations that narrowly averted a 2016 strike, called Lewis a "tireless advocate" for the city's educators and students. "And she's someone I've been honored to call a partner and a friend for many years," Jackson said in a statement.

Lewis was appointed to a third term in 2016 amid continued challenges to her health. Last year she told the Tribune that she needed extensive physical therapy after being hospitalized with a stroke that occurred amid her efforts to recover from a brain tumor.

"What really knocked me for a loop was that stroke," Lewis told the Tribune.

"The prognosis is that

Council may OK $6M in settlements

Payments would end 2 suits alleging police misconduct

By JOHN BYRNE | Chicago Tribune

Aldermen will consider an additional $6 million in payments Monday to settle lawsuits alleging Chicago police misconduct.

The City Council's Finance Committee will be asked by the city Law Department to approve a $3.5 million settlement with Patrick Hampton, who spent about 20 years in prison on a 60-year sentence for his alleged participation in the 1981 gang rape of two women, as well as the robbery of the women and a man during a concert at the International Amphitheatre.

A federal judge overturned Hampton's conviction in 2001 on the grounds his defense attorney was ineffective and failed to call witnesses who could have rebutted victims' testimony that Hampton participated in the attack. Prosecutors sought to retry Hampton but dropped the charges in 2011, according to his complaint.

Hampton's lawsuit alleges Chicago police detectives ignored evidence establishing his innocence. A witness to the attack on concertgoers at the "Holiday Jam" concert told police he recognized Hampton in the crowd but not that he was one of the attackers, according to the federal suit.

Detectives pressured one of the victims to falsely identify Hampton as an assailant, the suit states.

In the other settlement, the city is seeking to pay $2.5 million to the family of Aretha Simmons, who says a police officer pointed a gun at her 3-year-old daughter's chest during a 2013 raid of the family's Chicago home.

Simmons also said her daughter witnessed police slamming her against a wall and holding a gun to the head of her grandmother and suffered psychological distress from the incident, according to the suit.

Expert for cop: Shooting justified

He testifies bat-wielding teen posed threat to Officer Rialmo

By DAN HINKEL
Chicago Tribune

A police shooting expert testified Friday that Chicago police Officer Robert Rialmo was justified in shooting Quintonio LeGrier even if the 19-year-old didn't swing the baseball bat he held, saying he posed a potentially deadly threat.

Emanuel Kapelsohn, an expert on police training and firearms hired by the city, also said that "less lethal" weapons such as a Taser shock device or pepper spray might not have been effective.

"People are killed with baseball bats every year," he told jurors on the fifth day of a trial over lawsuits stemming from the divisive 2015 shooting that also killed bystander Bettie Jones, 55. Earlier this month, the city tentatively settled a lawsuit filed by Jones' family for $16 million.

During a sometimes testy cross-examination by a lawyer for the LeGrier family, Kapelsohn acknowledged that the summary of the shooting he gave jurors depended in part on Rialmo's version of the incident. The officer's accounts of the shooting have varied.

The trial over the LeGrier family's lawsuit has turned largely on two key topics: whether LeGrier swung the bat at Rialmo as the officer testified, and the distance that separated the two when Rialmo fired. The shooting happened as Rialmo and his partner responded to a domestic disturbance early the morning after Christmas 2015. When LeGrier approached them with an aluminum baseball bat, Rialmo fired, hitting him five times.

Kapelsohn's testimony stood in contrast to the statements of forensic and medical experts hired by the LeGrier family. A forensic expert testified this week that LeGrier was at least 10 feet from the cop at the time of the shooting, while a pathologist said the teen's wounds and other evidence contradicted Rialmo's account of LeGrier raising the bat before he was shot. The pathologist also said that most of the bullets went in through the man's back.

On Wednesday, Rialmo demonstrated for jurors how he said LeGrier swung the bat downward at him.

But Kapelsohn said LeGrier would not have had to swing the bat for Rialmo to reasonably believe he faced an immediate lethal threat.

Rialmo has given varying accounts of both his position and LeGrier's before the shooting, but Kapelsohn noted the differing scenarios and said Rialmo was "within a very dangerous zone."

The expert also testified that he test-fired Rialmo's 9 mm semi-automatic pistol and found he could fire seven rounds in just over a second, illustrating for jurors how quickly the incident might have unfolded. Rialmo fired seven or eight shots at LeGrier.

On cross-examination, Basileios Foutris, an attorney for the LeGrier family, highlighted the officer's inconsistent accounts. He noted, for example, that a detective who talked to Rialmo after the shooting said the officer didn't mention the bat swing.

"If the officers are not accurately describing what happened, the shooting might not have been appropriate," Kapelsohn acknowledged.

Foutris also tried to dent the expert's credibility by pointing out that he usually testifies for defendants, not plaintiffs, and that he expected to make more than $33,000 for his work on the case. He also questioned Kapelsohn about his ownership of 50 to 100 guns.

Kapelsohn is a well-known expert who has been involved in multiple cases stemming from high-profile police shootings. Last year he testified that a Minnesota officer's account of events indicated he was justified in shooting Philando Castile, according to news clippings. Castile's recorded fatal shooting during a traffic stop — which came after Castile warned the officer he had a gun — sparked outrage and led to manslaughter charges against the officer. The cop, who said he believed Castile was pulling his gun, was acquitted.

The clash of experts in the LeGrier case mirrors the rift between police Superintendent Eddie Johnson and the city's officer disciplinary agency, the Civilian Office of Police Accountability. COPA ruled the shooting unjustified and recommended that Rialmo be fired. Johnson disagreed and ruled the shooting was warranted.

The case has been politically heated since it took place just a month after Mayor Rahm Emanuel was forced by a judge to release video of an officer shooting black teen Laquan McDonald 16 times.

Rialmo, who is on paid desk duty, also remains under investigation for a December 2017 bar fight in which he punched two men in the face in an altercation caught on security video. His lawyer, Joel Brodsky, has said Rialmo was defending himself.

Flood warnings remain in effect for Chicago-area rivers

By ELVIA MALAGON
Chicago Tribune

After two days of heavy rain that added to a soggy year and triggered pockets of flooding around the Chicago area — prompting the CTA to temporarily shut down one of its train lines — drier conditions are ahead, forecasters say.

So far this month, Chicago has recorded 6.84 inches of rain, which is nearly 3.6 inches above normal, said Matt Friedlein, a National Weather Service meteorologist. The wettest June was in 1892, when 10.58 inches fell.

At O'Hare International Airport, 2.64 inches of rain fell between Thursday and Friday afternoon, Friedlein said. Some suburban areas got much more: Monee logged 5.68 inches, Park Forest had 4.14 inches and Aurora got 3.69 inches, according to the weather service.

Friday morning's commute was a bear for some. At the height of the morning rush, flooding along Niles Center Road in Skokie — which runs diagonally between the Dempster and Oakton CTA stations — halted service on the Yellow Line for nearly two hours.

A flood warning remains in place for area rivers, including the Des Plaines River in Cook County, the DuPage River in Will County and the Fox River near Kane and McHenry counties, according to the weather service. By Friday morning, the Fox River at Algonquin and the east branch of the DuPage River near Bolingbrook and the Des Plaines River near Des Plaines had all surpassed flood stage, according to the weather service.

This week's rain adds to a year that has been wetter than usual, said Ricky Castro, a National Weather Service meteorologist. Chicago had the wettest May on record, with 8.21 inches of rain. Since January, the Chicago area has recorded 25.69 inches of precipitation including rain and snow, Friedlein said — making it the wettest year on record through June 22. The previous record was set in 2009 with 25.41 inches of rain and snow.

It remains to be seen whether Chicago will see enough rain in the next week to surpass 2013 as the wettest first half of the year on record. That year saw 28.46 inches of rain through June 30.

The weekend is expected to be dry but with below-normal temperatures, Castro said. On Saturday, temperatures are expected to range from 75 to 61 degrees.

Participants and viewers of the Chicago Pride Parade will be happy to hear that Sunday is expected to be the nicest day this weekend — and it may be sunny. Temperatures will range from 60 to 80 degrees across the Chicago area.

Jury awards $2.8M over IPRA firing

Suit alleged dismissal was for finding shootings unjustified

By JEREMY GORNER
Chicago Tribune

A Cook County jury has awarded $2.8 million to a former supervisor for Chicago's now-defunct police oversight agency, who alleged in a lawsuit against the city that he was fired for refusing to change his findings in police shootings he considered unjustified.

Jurors deliberated for less than an hour Thursday before reaching a verdict in favor of Lorenzo Davis, a former supervisor for the Independent Police Review Authority. The agency was dissolved last year amid criticism of its effectiveness in investigating police-involved shootings and allegations of officer misconduct.

The jury award is the latest development in a long saga involving the city's historically broken police disciplinary system, which came under renewed fire after the court-ordered release of video showing an officer fatally shooting 17-year-old Laquan McDonald in 2014. The video's release, among other things, cost IPRA's boss, Scott Ando, his job and ultimately led to the agency's demise.

Following the McDonald video's release in November 2015, the Tribune published an analysis of IPRA's investigations into more than 400 Chicago police shootings since the agency was created in September 2007. The newspaper discovered IPRA found only two of those shootings unjustified.

Davis, also a retired Chicago police commander, initially filed a federal lawsuit in 2015 against IPRA contending Ando fired him after Davis found that an officer was not justified in using lethal force against 17-year-old Cedrick Chatman in 2013. Davis also argued his conclusions in other cases that officers were not justified in shootings contributed to his being fired.

The federal lawsuit was eventually dismissed when a judge determined that Davis' refusal to change his finding was not protected free speech under the First Amendment. But his lawyers refiled the lawsuit in Cook County Circuit Court, this time suing the city under the state's whistleblower law.

One of Davis' lawyers, Torrey Hamilton, said Thursday night her client was "thrown out and treated like a garbage" from IPRA for trying to do the right thing.

One of the shootings that Davis found unjustified was the January 2013 slaying of Chatman by Officer Kevin Fry. Fry contended that Chatman turned and pointed a dark object at officers as he ran, prompting Fry to fire four shots in fear for his life and that of his partner, Officer Lou Toth. Chatman, who was suspected of stealing a Dodge Charger in a violent carjacking, was fatally shot in his side. The object he held turned out to be a black iPhone box.

When Davis investigated the case and determined Fry was not justified in shooting Chatman, another IPRA supervisor who reviewed Davis' work disagreed.

In late 2016, the city agreed to pay $3 million to settle a lawsuit by Chatman's mother for the shooting.

Jackie Wilson, 57, gets emotional as he is escorted out of court Friday after learning he would be released. The police union president called the ruling "disgraceful."

Man accused in cop killings freed

Richard O'Brien and William Fahey left the Leighton Criminal Court Building without comment after Hooks' ruling. Special prosecutor Michael O'Rourke said they were understandably upset by the decision.

Kevin Graham, president of the Chicago Fraternal Order of Police, who attended the hearing, called Hooks' ruling "disgraceful."

"I'm very disappointed that a man that is responsible, who was at the scene, that has admitted to being there when two honored police officers of the Chicago Police Department were murdered, gunned down, and he walks out," Graham said.

As reporters and cameramen crowded around him during his exit from the jail, Wilson said he was "happy to be a member of society again."

"Being a victim of one of a number of Jon Burge's brutalities ... " he said as his voice trailed off and he sighed heavily. "Oh Lord, it's just, it's been a rocky ride."

As Wilson walked toward a waiting car, a nearby woman cried out, "Thank God you're free." Wilson stepped toward her, grasped her hand and kissed it before departing.

The woman, Illicea Barnes, 51, said she just happened to be nearby and was moved when she heard an inmate would be walking free after being locked up so long.

"Just imagine all he has missed and lost," she told reporters.

Wilson's attorneys said they have arranged for a social worker and a psychologist to help ease his transition from prison. Citing fears for his safety, they declined to say where he planned to live.

G. Flint Taylor, a Wilson lawyer who has represented numerous alleged victims of Burge over the years, called on the special prosecutors to drop the murder charges, saying they had no viable case now that the confession had been thrown out

"Any self-respecting prosecutor would dismiss this case," Taylor told reporters.

But O'Rourke, who leads the special prosecution team, vowed to vigorously pursue the prosecution as he maintained there was ample evidence besides the tainted confession to prove Wilson's guilt.

"Jon Burge has no effect on the evidence to prove the actual criminal conduct, which is separate and apart from anything Burge-related," he said. "We have witnesses and we have testimony that's completely non-Burge-related that will set out this case and set it out in convincing fashion."

The ruling to free Wilson comes as special prosecutors filed paperwork earlier this week indicating they will ask an appeals court to reverse Hooks' decision to throw out the conviction and order a retrial.

Neither side in this decades-old court battle disputes that Wilson's now-dead brother, Andrew, fatally shot the two officers during a traffic stop or that Jackie Wilson was present. What will be at issue in a retrial is whether Jackie Wilson played an active role in the killing.

His lawyers assert that at least one witness says Wilson appeared to be in a "state of shock" during the shooting. But prosecutors contend that Wilson was hardly an innocent figure, arguing that both brothers were on the way to try to break out another accused cop killer from custody when they were pulled over by O'Brien and Fahey.

Wilson's first conviction was tossed out after an appeals court ruled that he should not have been tried simultaneously with his brother. At a retrial in 1989, a jury acquitted him of Fahey's murder but convicted him of O'Brien's. He was sentenced to life in prison.

At a hearing Thursday, the team of special prosecutors laid out their case for keeping Wilson in custody pending a third trial. Prosecutors summarized the expected testimony of several witnesses, including eyewitnesses who implicated Wilson as well as correctional officers who allegedly heard him take credit for the slayings while in custody.

But on questioning by the judge, prosecutors acknowledged they didn't know whether any of the witnesses were still alive to testify.

That left Hooks, who has sparred in court with the special prosecutors for months, incredulous.

"You can't tell me what witnesses will be able to come into the courtroom, raise their right hand and testify?" the judge asked.

In response, Wilson's attorneys revealed that one of those witnesses has recanted in the past month, claiming he was threatened decades ago into making false statements from the witness stand.

Prosecutors cast doubt on the reliability of the witness's affidavit, expressing skepticism because it took him so long to come forward.

But Hooks, raising his voice, was insistent that he could not consider the credibility of decades-old testimony outside the context of what has been revealed about Burge in the years since.

Disciplinary authorities fired Burge in 1993 after determining he had tortured Andrew Wilson.

Burge was convicted in federal court of perjury and obstruction of justice in 2010 after jurors found he lied when he denied witnessing torture or abusing suspects in connection with a lawsuit. While he was not charged with torture, prosecutors had to prove allegations of abuse to support the other counts. Burge spent 4 1/2 years in prison and on home confinement.

The Burge scandal has long fueled resentment among African-Americans who have accused the Police Department of widespread abuse and racism.

Those feelings were exacerbated in late 2015 after the court-ordered release of a video showing white Officer Jason Van Dyke shooting black teen Laquan McDonald 16 times as he walked away from police with a knife in his hand. The furor over the shooting sparked a political crisis for Mayor Rahm Emanuel and led to a push for reform of the Police Department after a scathing report by the U.S. Department of Justice found that officers were poorly trained and quick to use excessive and even deadly force without facing consequences.

Illinois pulls license plate number tied to Nazis

the Southern Poverty Law Center have singled out as white supremacist 'hate speech' on one's license plate is going to invite scrutiny," Gaines wrote.

Still, Gaines wrote that he was deleting the tweet "as I certainly don't want any harm to come to anyone for something they were apparently unaware of."

The owner of the Tesla said "1488" was just the number the state of Illinois assigned when a relative applied for license plates years ago.

"I had no idea this was associated with white supremacy," the man said, declining to be named out of fear for his safety. "This is a license plate that's been in my family for decades. It's not even a vanity plate. This is just the number they gave to the family years and years ago. ... I think it was my grandmother. I honestly don't recall. It's just been passed down."

The man said he planned to file a police report out of fear that someone might try to harm him over the plate. While he said no one has threatened him personally, he saw the responses to the original tweet — some of which appeared to advocate a violent response if anyone saw his car on the street.

"Bust his windows and slash his tires," one Twitter user wrote in response.

"If you see this car in Illinois: burn it," wrote another.

The plate holder said the assumptions made about him on Twitter are completely wrong.

"Absolutely, 143 million percent no, I am not a white supremacist. I am not a Nazi. I do not subscribe to any of those beliefs," he said. "I feel like I'm a target for something I don't believe in, and I'm a target for something I had no idea about. Quite frankly, I just need to get home because I'm fearing for my safety."

Experts said that the zeal some people have for outing and shaming white supremacists for their beliefs can sometimes lead them to assign blame where none is deserved.

"1488 is absolutely an extremely common number for white supremacists, but people could use that number for other purposes too," said Mark Pitcavage, a senior research fellow with the Anti-Defamation League's Center on Extremism. "You couldn't really assume it's white supremacy."

He recalled that years ago he frequently got calls from people concerned about stickers they saw on cars in Southern states showing the number 88. But, he said, that was also the number for Dale Jarrett, a popular NASCAR driver.

"So there were tons of people in the South who had 88 stickers, but that wasn't because they were white supremacists," Pitcavage said.

He noted that the symbol use of the number 1488 most likely rose to popularity among white supremacists in the 1980s and early 1990s. That would make it unlikely that the Chicago man's license plate would reference some sort of Nazi or white power ideology.

"If this was a plate that had basically been in the family's hands for a couple of generations, there's virtually no probability it could have been associated with that," Pitcavage said.

Officials with the Illinois secretary of state's office said state records only go back to 2002 but show the plate was associated with another person who shares the same last name as the current plate holder, who took over the number earlier this year.

Family heirloom or not, the plate's days are numbered.

"We are going to pull the plate," said Dave Druker, secretary of state spokesman. "We checked with the Anti-Defamation League and they confirmed those numbers are associated with white supremacy. So our plan is to reach out to (the plate holder) and offer him another license plate."

The plate holder said that can't happen soon enough.

"I'm going to be storing the car until I can get the plates changed," he said.

Soccer fans gather in 2016 at the Globe Pub, whose ex-owner, Stuart Johnston, has been indicted on income tax charges.

Pub's ex-owner faces tax charges

Allegedly pocketed $200K withheld from paychecks

BY JASON MEISNER
Chicago Tribune

A former owner of one of Chicago's most popular soccer bars has been indicted on federal income tax charges alleging he failed to turn over nearly $200,000 to the Internal Revenue Service that his business had withheld from his employees' paychecks.

The 17-count indictment against Stuart Johnston, the founder of the Globe Pub, comes in the midst of the World Cup tournament — a monthlong event that typically draws thousands of rabid soccer fans to the pub in the 1900 block of West Irving Park Road.

From 2012 to 2014, Johnston withheld $199,200 from employee paychecks that he was required to pay to the IRS on a quarterly basis but instead kept the money for himself, the charges allege. The money withheld from employees' checks was for individual income taxes as well as Social Security and Medicare taxes, the indictment says.

During the same three-year period, Johnston failed to file a personal income tax return or a tax return for the pub, which did business under the name Buffoons Inc., according to the indictment.

Johnston, 54, is scheduled to be arraigned July 5 before U.S. Magistrate Judge Young Kim, records show.

Johnston could not be reached for comment Friday, and court records do not indicate whether he has retained an attorney.

Records show Johnston sold his interest in the bar in 2016.

A native of Scotland and a former semiprofessional soccer player, Johnston immigrated to Chicago in the 1990s. He opened the Globe in 2004 after noticing that Chicago lacked suitable places to watch soccer, according to news reports.

"That's why we thought, 'Yeah, there is a market for this,'" Johnston told ESPN Chicago in 2010. "Soccer isn't big in America, but there's a good demand, and if you do it right, the people will come."

The Globe is widely considered today to be one of the best soccer pubs in the nation. It twice has been named Best Soccer Bar by the U.S. Soccer Federation and in 2014 was voted best sports bar in America by Nightclub and Bar, an industry magazine.

"Whether a regular or a visitor from out of town, we want you to enjoy watching your sports team play in a friendly, knowledgeable atmosphere," the pub's website says.

Plan targeting pimps, customers goes to council

BY JOHN BYRNE
Chicago Tribune

An effort to crack down on pimps and men seeking sex advanced through a City Council committee Friday, part of a West Side alderman's effort to give residents more tools to try to keep prostitution out of their neighborhoods.

Ald. Jason Ervin, 28th, said he wants to clean up streets where children have witnessed sex acts and parishioners have picked up condoms from the sidewalks around churches each Sunday. He said he hopes the American Civil Liberties Union, which has in the past challenged Chicago loitering laws as unconstitutional, will take into account what's going on in his ward.

"I would just hope they would see this from the other perspective, and not just necessarily look at it from their vantage point," Ervin said.

"It's terrible. Who wants to pick up condoms off their lawn in the morning? Do you? Does anybody?" Ervin said. "So I understand their view, but there's another side to this. And folks need some help, and folks need some relief."

Ervin's proposal seeks to focus not on punishing the prostitutes themselves, but the men soliciting them and the pimps. That's because the women often are forced into a life of prostitution, he said.

So those who police think are pimps or soliciting sex acts must first be warned to leave a designated loitering zone for at least eight hours. If they return within that time, they could be fined from $1,000 to $3,000 and have their car impounded. They also could be jailed up to six months, according to the ordinance.

The fines for prostitution under the ordinance would range from $50 to $500, and could include up to 120 hours of community service.

American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois spokesman Ed Yohnka said the organization has concerns about the vagueness of the proposed ordinance and how it might be applied, especially because prostitution already is illegal.

"It's vague in terms of where it could be enforced and against whom it could be enforced," he said. "Could this only be applied in neighborhoods with lots of people of color? Could any woman in a short skirt be treated as a prostitute?"

If the ordinance is approved, Yohnka said the ACLU would study it and the way police use it before deciding whether to file a lawsuit.

The proposal passed the Public Safety Committee and will head to the full City Council on Wednesday. Ervin said he also wants to strengthen the city's gang loitering and narcotics loitering rules, which have been the subject of legal challenges in the past.

The City Council passed an anti-gang loitering law under Mayor Richard M. Daley in 1992, but the U.S. Supreme Court struck it down in 1999 as too vague.

The council passed a new, watered-down anti-loitering ordinance a year later.

U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin holds a card written by a Chicago child to detained migrant children during a news conference Friday. The Illinois Democrat said the agency housing the children, Heartland Alliance, is doing everything it can for them.

the age of 5," Durbin said. "I've seen them. They are toddlers and infants — they're kids. It looks like a kindergarten situation or a day care situation when you go in and visit with them. "We know for many of them this a traumatic moment ... that these children are going through a lot. It's terrible at a young age to be separated from your mother, and that's what's happened as a result of official government policy." After days of staying out of the political controversy surrounding President Donald Trump's immigration policy, Heartland officials directly condemned the practice of separating children from their parents at the United States' southern border while asking for support from the community while they look after the minors in their care. "These children are scared when they arrive at our doors," Diaz said at a news conference in Edgewater. "And I can tell you my staff — who are clinicians, teachers and family reunification specialists — are doing everything in their power to make a horrible situation less scary, to provide comfort and support to the children and to reunite them with their families as quickly as possible." Heartland has identified about two-thirds of the children's families, Diaz said. Even when the organization has found a family member, it can be difficult if a relative is in an adult detention center. "We're like on a scavenger hunt," Diaz said. "We talk to a kid, we find out if they had a destination or if they had family members they were planning to reunite with here. We sleuth it out. We're like detectives." On Wednesday, Heartland Alliance was named in two lawsuits filed on behalf of two boys from Brazil who had been separated from their fathers. Diaz said the organization hadn't reviewed the lawsuit and declined to comment. Durbin, however, stepped in to defend Heartland, which he said is acting only as a caregiver. "They are doing everything they can for these kids," he said. "They didn't create the 'zero tolerance' policy. They are ones who are trying to deal with the children who are the victims of this policy." Uncertainty has surrounded the fate of the more 2,300 migrant children who have been separated from their parents since Attorney General Jeff Sessions' "zero tolerance" policy began last month. Children crossing the border with their parents have been separated because adults illegally entering the country are charged criminally under the policy. Earlier in the week, Trump signed an executive order halting the practice and permitting migrant families to remain together in detention. However, that measure has been challenged in federal court by immigration advocates who fear it would eliminate the previous 20-day limit that children could be detained, per a 1997 consent decree. On Friday morning, Trump reaffirmed the need for a strict posture on illegal immigration while accusing Democratic lawmakers of taking advantage of the situation for the midterm elections in November. "We must maintain a Strong Southern Border," Trump said in a tweet. "We cannot allow our Country to be overrun by illegal immigrants as the Democrats tell their phony stories of sadness and grief, hoping it will help them in the elections. Obama and others had the same pictures, and did nothing about it!" While Durbin said he was pleased with Trump's decision to end the separation policy Durbin characterized as "inhumane" and "cruel," he said the executive order doesn't solve the broader issue of finding the least restrictive environment to house children. A Pentagon spokesman said Thursday that the Defense Department is preparing to house as many as 20,000 migrant children on U.S. military bases. "We've got to stand up and speak up for these young people and their families," Durbin said. "They make these deadly, dangerous journeys to our country, not because they are looking for a vacation. They are coming for safety."

Neuropathy • Hip Pain • Shoulder Pain • Joint Pain

Good News! Local Regenerative Medicine Center now offers solutions for you!

Local Regenerative Medicine Center devotes much of its time treating chronically ill patients – especially those in pain. With 3 years experience, serving Northern Illinois with multiple practices, it continues to utilize cutting-edge technology to help restore patients' health. The institute recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure: regenerative stem cell therapy.

Local Regenerative Medicine Center recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure; regenerative stem cell therapy. Local Regenerative Medicine Center is now offering painless stem cell injections for pain and advanced procedures for arthritic and/or degenerative conditions, especially those found in the knees, hips, should, neck and lower back.

These remarkable treatments can repair tissue in the body that has been damaged from age, disease or degeneration. They do this by pinpointing the impaired areas, removing the swelling with powerful anti-inflammatory properties and healing them by regenerating new cells and tissue.

This innovative therapy is particularly effective in treating such conditions as degenerative arthritis, degenerative cartilage and ligaments, bone spurs, degenerative joint disease, bursitis, tendinitis, and especially Osteoarthritis of the Knee.

According to the Local Regenerative Medicine Center chief medical officer, patients can experience a significant decrease in pain and an improvement in range of motion within weeks of treatment.

"We are so excited about the results we are seeing with our patients. More Importantly, our patients are excited about living their lives enjoying the activities they enjoy. We invite you to attend one of our upcoming seminars near your home, to learn more about this incredible healing technology and how it might be able to help you or someone you love finally live a pain free life."

U.S. still mum on separated families

Agencies won't give plan how to reunite kids with parents

BY JAZMINE ULLOA, MOLLY HENNESSY-FISKE AND NOAH BIERMAN
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The process of reunifying families who have been separated at the border could take months, federal officials said Friday while lawyers, advocates and lawmakers warned that the path ahead remained murky and chaotic, and the Trump administration failed again to provide clear direction on how to resolve the issue.

“To wait four months, my God, that’s agonizing,” said Daniel Garza, president of the Libre Initiative, a conservative Latino organization, after a field supervisor for the Department of Health and Human Services, speaking at a roundtable in McAllen, Texas, convened by the state’s two senators, outlined a process that could last that long.

Federal officials have said 2,300 children have been detained apart from their parents since May, when the administration began holding many adults who cross the border illegally and bringing misdemeanor prosecutions against them, rather than allowing them to await asylum hearings with monitoring — a process President Donald Trump has derided as “catch and release.”

Trump on Wednesday signed an executive order intended to halt the separation of families by detaining families together. Since then, his administration has struggled to articulate a plan to put the families back together or determine what effect it would have on enforcement, given the limited bed space for families.

MANDEL NGAN/GETTY-AFF

President Donald Trump says Angel Family stories have been ignored in favor of immigrants crossing the border illegally.

An administration official on Friday confirmed that about 500 children have been reunited with their parents. It was unclear how many — if any — of those reunifications occurred since Trump’s order on Wednesday. The official was not authorized to speak on the record.

The official said federal agencies were setting up a centralized process to reunite families at the Port Isabel Detention Center, at the southern tip of Texas. How many children remained in the custody of federal agencies was unclear, because of the confusing web of agencies responsible for processing and detaining children and parents.

Adults have been in the custody of the U.S. Marshals Service if they are awaiting prosecution, or the Department of Homeland Security.

Most of the children are held in centers supervised by the Department of Health and Human Services.

The lack of a plan continued to roil Congress. Sen. Jeanne Shaheen, a New Hampshire Democrat, called on Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen to resign if she could not “promptly produce and implement a plan to reunite children separated from their parents.”

“It’s unconscionable that this policy was carried out without any plans or procedures in place to eventually reunite these families,” she said in a statement.

Nielsen’s office did not respond to a request for comment, part of a silence from the agency that began Wednesday, when Trump hastily drew up the order.

The White House offered little in the way of a plan. Instead, officials criticized media coverage of the issue. A tweet from press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, attacking a photo of a young Honduran girl used in a Time magazine photo illustration, was blasted out on the official White House constituent newsletter.

Time stood by its use of the photo as capturing “the stakes of the moment.”

Trump also hosted an event with a group he calls Angel Families, people who lost loved ones in murders and drunk-driving accidents involving immigrants in the country illegally.

“You hear the other side. You never hear this side,” Trump said, standing by the victims in front of a backdrop that read “Protect Our Families.” Several family members held up large photos of relatives who had been killed.

“These are American citizens permanently separated from their loved ones,” Trump said.

He and the family members accused the media of ignoring their stories in favor of sympathetic coverage of immigrants who crossed the border illegally.

Numerous studies have shown that immigrants — legal and illegal — commit no more crimes than the general population.

Trump pointed to the families’ losses as inspiration for changing the nation’s immigration laws.

But with an early morning tweet, he all but killed an immigration measure supported by the House Republican leaders, saying that lawmakers shouldn’t bother with legislation he had claimed to support a few days ago.

“Republicans should stop wasting their time on Immigration until after we elect more Senators and Congressmen/women in November,” Trump tweeted.

The legislation, backed by Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., offered a potential vehicle for a long-term fix to the law under which immigrant families have been separated under the administration’s zero tolerance policy.

Special correspondent Eli Stokols contributed from Washington. Hennessy-Fiske reported from McAllen. Ulloa and Bierman reported from Washington.

Justices rule warrants needed for cell towers

5-4 decision marks key change in how police gather data

BY MARK SHERMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Police generally need a warrant to look at records that reveal where cellphone users have been, the Supreme Court ruled Friday in a victory for privacy interests in the digital age.

The 5-4 decision marks a change in how police may obtain information that phone companies collect from cellphone towers that allow people to make and receive calls and transmit data. The information has become an important tool in criminal investigations.

Chief Justice John Roberts, joined by the court’s four liberals, said cellphone location information “is detailed, encyclopedic and effortlessly compiled.” Roberts wrote that “an individual maintains a legitimate expectation of privacy in the record of his physical movements” as they are captured by cellphone towers.

Roberts said the court’s decision is limited to cellphone tracking information and does not affect other business records, including those held by banks. He also wrote that police still can respond to an emergency and obtain records without a warrant.

But the dissenting conservative justices, Anthony Kennedy, Samuel Alito, Clarence Thomas and Neil Gorsuch, cast doubt on Roberts’ claim that the decision was limited. Each wrote a dissenting opinion, and Kennedy said in his that the court’s “new and uncharted course will inhibit law enforcement” and “keep defendants and judges guessing for years to come.”

Roberts does not often line up with his liberal colleagues against a unified front of conservative justices, but digital-age privacy cases can cross ideological lines, as when the court unanimously said in 2014 that a warrant is needed before police can search the cellphone of someone they’ve just arrested.

The court ruled Friday in the case of Timothy Carpenter, who was sentenced to 116 years in prison for his role in a string of robberies of Radio Shack and T-

Mobile stores in Michigan and Ohio. Cell tower records spanning 127 days, which investigators got without a warrant, bolstered the case against Carpenter.

Investigators obtained the records with a court order that requires a lower standard than the “probable cause” needed for a warrant. “Probable cause” requires strong evidence that a person has committed a crime.

The judge at Carpenter’s trial refused to suppress the records, finding no warrant was needed, and a federal appeals court agreed. The Trump administration said the lower court decisions should be upheld.

The American Civil Liberties Union, representing Carpenter, said a warrant would provide protection against unjustified government snooping.

The administration relied in part on a 1979 Supreme Court decision that treated phone records differently than the conversation in a phone call, for which a warrant generally is required.

The earlier case involved a single home telephone and the court said then that people had no expectation of privacy in the records of calls made and kept by the phone company.

JUSTIN LANE/EPA

A pedestrian checks his cellphone Friday in New York City. The Supreme Court’s decision is limited to cellphone tracking information, Chief Justice John Roberts said.

The court decided the 1979 case before the digital age, and even the law on which prosecutors relied to obtain an order for Carpenter’s records dates from 1986, when few people had cellphones.

The Supreme Court in recent years has acknowledged technology’s effects on privacy. In 2014, Roberts also wrote the opinion that police must generally get a warrant to search the cellphones of people they arrest.

Roberts said then that a cellphone is almost “a feature of human anatomy.” On Friday, he returned to the metaphor to note that a phone “faithfully follows its owner beyond public thoroughfares and into private residences, doctor’s offices, political headquarters, and other potentially revealing locales.”

As a result, he said, “when the government tracks the location of a cell phone it achieves near perfect surveillance, as if it had attached an ankle monitor to the phone’s user.”

It’s too soon to know whether Carpenter will benefit from Friday’s decision, said Harold Gurewitz, Carpenter’s lawyer in Detroit.

The Cincinnati-based 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will have to evaluate whether the cellphone tracking records can still be used against Carpenter under the “good faith” exception for law enforcement — evidence should not necessarily be thrown out if authorities obtained it in a way they thought the law required.

There also is other evidence that might be sufficient to sustain Carpenter’s conviction.

Attempt to oust interim MSU chief fails amid abuse scandal

MATTHEW DAE SMITH/AP

Leslie Miller, whose daughter says she was sexually abused by ex-Michigan State sports doctor Larry Nassar, calls on trustees to fire interim President John Engler on Friday.

BY SUSAN SVRLUGA
The Washington Post

Michigan State University’s trustees voted Friday to keep the school’s interim president in place despite pressure to replace him.

Former Michigan Gov. John Engler was hired as interim president in the wake of a sex abuse scandal that led to the resignation of the public university’s long-time president in January.

Engler’s appointment was controversial from the start, but recent weeks comments he made about sex abuse victims only generated more outrage.

That led to calls for his resignation from both U.S. senators from Michigan, other political leaders and more than 100 women who alleged they had been sexually abused by Larry Nassar, the former Michigan State sports doctor.

On Friday a trustee forced the issue, calling for a vote to remove Engler. Two trustees voted to dismiss him, and six voted against.

“I think John Engler got the message loud and clear,” said Brian Mosallam, the trustee who sought the vote.

Last week, the Detroit Free Press and the Chronicle of Higher Education disclosed emails Engler had sent to a university official suggesting that Rachael Denhollander, the first woman to publicly accuse Nassar of sexual abuse, was getting a kickback from her attorney for manipulating other victims.

Denhollander has denied the claim and said the suggestion that the women could be manipulated was disgusting.

On Thursday, Engler issued a public apology.

Trustees also Friday approved in principle the $500 million the university agreed to pay to settle lawsuits by 332 women who alleged abuse by Nassar.

Trustees also increased funding for counseling and investigations into allegations of sexual assault.

Trustee Dianne Byrum, who also voted against Engler, said the search for a president will be expedited.

TEMPE POLICE DEPARTMENT
A Tempe, Ariz., police report Thursday said the crash wouldn't have happened were the driver not distracted.

Police: Backup driver failed

Woman distracted in fatal self-driving crash, report says

By TOM KRISHER AND JACQUES BILLEAUD
Associated Press

PHOENIX — The human backup driver in an autonomous Uber SUV was streaming the television show “The Voice” on her phone and looking downward just before fatally striking a pedestrian in suburban Phoenix, according to a police report.

The 300-page report released Thursday night by police in Tempe revealed that driver Rafaela Vasquez had been streaming the musical talent show via Hulu in the 43 minutes before the March 18 crash that killed Elaine Herzberg as she crossed a darkened road outside the lines of a crosswalk.

The report said the crash, which marks the first fatality involving a self-driving vehicle, wouldn't have happened had the driver not been distracted.

Dash camera video shows Vasquez was looking down near her right knee for four or five seconds before the crash. She looked up a half-second before striking Herzberg as the Volvo was traveling about 44 miles per hour.

Vasquez told police

Herzberg “came out of nowhere,” and she didn't see her prior to the collision.

But officers calculated that had Vasquez been paying attention, she could have reacted 143 feet before impact and brought the SUV to a stop about 42.6 feet before hitting Herzberg.

“This crash would not have occurred if Vasquez would have been monitoring the vehicle and roadway conditions and was not distracted,” the report stated.

Tempe police are looking at a vehicular manslaughter charge in the crash, according to a March 19 affidavit filed to get a search warrant for audio, video and data stored in the Uber SUV.

The National Transportation Safety Board, in a preliminary report issued last month, said the autonomous driving system on Uber's Volvo XC-90 SUV spotted Herzberg about six seconds before hitting her, but did not stop because the system used to automatically apply brakes in potentially dangerous situations had been disabled.

The system is disabled while Uber's cars are under computer control, “to reduce the potential for erratic vehicle behavior,” the NTSB report said.

Instead of the system, Uber relies on the human backup driver to intervene, the report stated.

Feds OK plan to protect safety net, rural hospitals

$3.5B in Medicaid money to be distributed to about 200 hospitals under new formula

By LISA SCHENCKER
Chicago Tribune

The federal government has approved Illinois' plan to keep a pot of cash flowing to hospitals, including many that need it to serve the state's poorest residents.

A number of Illinois hospitals had worried they would have trouble staying open if the plan wasn't approved by July. The plan outlines a new formula for distributing about $3.5 billion in Medicaid money to about 200 hospitals throughout the state, as part of the state's hospital assessment program.

Under that program, hospitals contribute money into a fund, which receives a federal match. The money is then redistributed to hospitals based on a complex formula. That formula, however, expires after June, and hospital leaders sought to revise the formula, which hadn't been updated in more than a decade.

Gov. Bruce Rauner signed a bill in March redesigning the program with an aim of making reimbursements more equitable and using dollars more efficiently. But the state needed the federal government to sign off.

For some hospitals serving mostly Medicaid patients, the money from the program makes up large portions of their budgets. It's a smaller portion of budgets at hospitals that serve large numbers of patients with private insurance.

"This is a critical step in the making sure our safety net and rural hospitals can keep their doors open in underserved communities," Rauner said in a news release

Thursday.

Starting in July, the program is expected to bring in $200 million new federal dollars to Illinois hospitals, said Danny Chun, a spokesman for the Illinois Health and Hospital Association, which helped craft the redesign.

"When you think about the fiscal challenges hospitals in the state face, that is significant," Chun said.

A number of Illinois hospital systems have made budget cuts in recent years, strained by Medicaid and Medicare reimbursements that don't pay for the full cost of care, unpaid patient bills and growing costs for medications and information technology, among other pressures.

Delta's ban on pit bull-type service dogs sparks backlash

By JEFF MARTIN
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Delta Air Lines says it's no longer allowing passengers to fly with pit bull-type dogs as service or support animals, a policy that's being met with criticism by groups that train service dogs and the people who use them.

The Atlanta-based airline describes its ban as an "enhancement" to its policy on animals in passenger areas. Delta will also limit travelers to a single emotional support animal per flight. The changes, announced this week, take effect July 10.

"It's a bit nuts because Delta is actually my preferred airline to fly with my service dog," said Fiona Gilbert of the San Francisco area, who said she flew about 300,000 miles with Delta in the past year with her pit bull-type dog, Koda.

Gilbert has a degenerative neurological condition, and Koda can sense when she might have a seizure and then get help if needed, she said.

"He's basically my alert system," she said. "He's my emergency response system. I trust him more than I trust myself when it comes to not feeling well. He's been trained to get help if I need him to. Koda and I are a team — we're inseparable."

Now, Gilbert has 20 trips planned with Delta later this year and is scrambling to figure out what to do.

Delta said its ban on pit bull-type dogs responds to "growing safety concerns" after several employees were bitten, the airline said in a statement.

"We must err on the side of safety," Delta said Friday. "Most recently, two Delta employees were bit by a pit bull traveling as a support animal last week. We struggled with the decision to expand the ban to service animals, knowing that some customers have legitimate needs, but we have determined that untrained, pit bull-type dogs posing as both service and support animals are a potential safety risk."

The bite happened during the boarding process for Delta flight 295 from Atlanta to Narita, Japan, the airline said.

But the ban is prompting a social media backlash, and is being criticized by several animal groups.

Delta "should resist unwarranted breed prejudice and rescind its breed ban," Matt Bershadker, president and CEO of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said Thursday.

Figuring out which dogs fall under the policy could be a challenge.

"Pit bull is an arbitrary label — there's no standard definition of what makes a dog a pit bull," said Regina Lizik, the communications and fundraising manager at Animal Farm Foundation in Bangall, New York, which provides service dogs to people with various disabilities. Gilbert's pit bull was trained there.

"It's all about that individual dog and their ability to do this work," Lizik said. "All dogs are individuals."

Delta's statement says pit bull-type dogs will be banned, but lists "Bull type dogs" on its online list of prohibited animals, which includes reptiles, spiders and goats, among others.

Gilbert said she understands Delta's desire to keep its employees safe. She said she supported the airline in March, when it announced new policies for service animals. Delta and United officials said at the time that they'd seen a rise in the number of support animals, and that some passengers were bringing all types of animals on board.

"The irony is that I switched airlines to Delta when I got a service dog because they have the nicest flight attendants, and they are a wonderful company to fly with," she said.

Gilbert said she hasn't received complaints about Koda curled up by her feet on Delta flights. Service dogs such as Koda are "much more polite and less disruptive than some passengers I've been on planes with," she said.

"Most people don't even know there's a 75-pound dog sitting there until we get up to leave," she added.

Illinois sanctions Harmony Health

State says care network of doctors, hospitals inadequate

By LISA SCHENCKER
Chicago Tribune

The state has temporarily halted automatic enrollments in Harmony Health Plan, saying its Medicaid managed care network of doctors and hospitals is inadequate.

It's the second time the state has blocked enrollment in a Medicaid managed care plan this year. The state stopped automatically assigning new Medicaid members to Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Illinois in April and also said new members could no longer choose it, alleging that its Medicaid managed care network was inadequate and the insurer wasn't responding to grievances and appeals appropriately.

New managed care members may still choose Harmony, but the state is no longer automatically assigning new members to it who don't choose plans on their own.

Harmony doesn't have enough providers in its network to ensure adequate access to all the required services across the state, according to a May 31 letter to Harmony from Robert Mendonsa, deputy administrator in the Division of Medical Programs at the Illinois Department of Healthcare and Family Services. In particular, the state has issues with adequate access to hospitals in some areas of the northwest and central parts of the state, Mendonsa wrote.

In a statement Thursday, Harmony Health Plans said it's committed to serving its members' needs. "We know collaborative partnerships with health care providers are critical to that mission and are confident in our ability to strengthen our partnerships with providers across the state," Harmony said.

The department may impose a penalty of $20,000 to $50,000 on Harmony if it continues to violate the terms of its contract with the state, according to the state's letter.

The state imposed a fine of $150,000 on Blue Cross.

The enrollment sanctions will be lifted once the insurers address the issues outlined, the department said. Harmony had about 260,000 people enrolled in its Medicaid managed care program as of May 1, including about 85,000 in Cook County. Blue Cross had about 476,000 people, according to the state.

Blue Cross is continuing to work with the department "to ensure we can resume enrollment of new Medicaid members," said Blue Cross spokeswoman Colleen Miller in an email Thursday. "We continue to make the investments and improvements necessary to provide long-term solutions to meet the needs of our members."

Both insurers are part of the state's revamped Medicaid managed care program, in which private insurers administer Medicaid benefits. Medicaid is a state- and federally funded health insurance program for the poor.

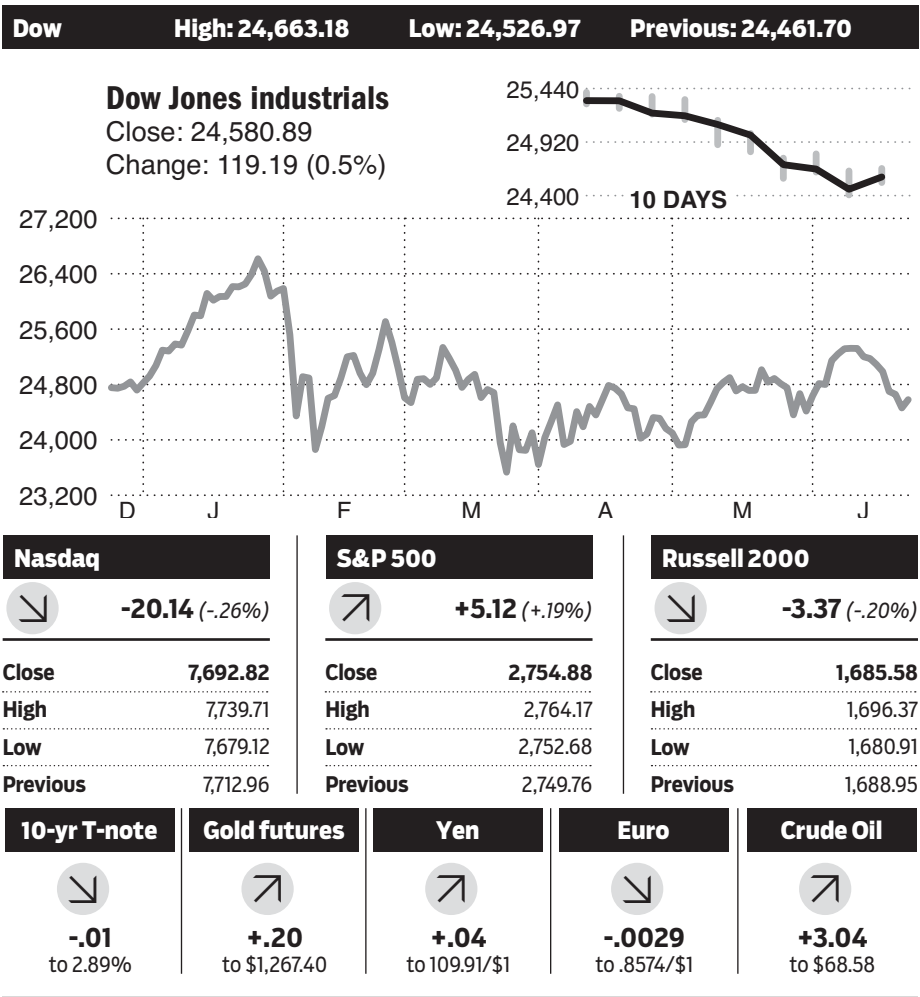

The recent overhaul aimed to expand the state's Medicaid managed care program to 80 percent of people on Medicaid in Illinois. Gov. Bruce Rauner also narrowed the number of insurers participating from 12 to seven, which he said would streamline administration and improve care.

Displaced Yemenis shelter Friday at an evacuation center in the port city of Hodeidah.

How the U.S. should help end a mass starvation in Yemen

We remember when Aleppo became a household word. The carnage inflicted on Syrian civilians in that city by their autocratic leader, Bashar Assad— with help from Russian forces — ingrained in the world’s collective consciousness the depths a despot will reach to cling to power. Thousands died. Much of the city was razed.

Soon, Hodeida, too, may become a household word. Hodeida is the primary port of the broken Middle Eastern nation of Yemen, a country ripped apart by three years of civil war. United Arab Emirates-backed forces loyal to Yemen’s exiled government, together with Saudi air power, have launched an offensive to retake Hodeida, now held by Houthi rebels. The Houthis control much of the Arabian Peninsula nation and are well-entrenched in Hodeida. The fighting could drag on for months.

The peril isn’t confined to the 600,000-some Yemenis who live in Hodeida; the metropolis is a lifeline for Yemenis throughout the country. More than three-fourths of Yemen’s food arrives via the Red Sea port. The United Nations estimates that fighting in Hodeida could inflict mass starvation on as many as 8 million of the country’s 28 million Yemenis.

An estimated 50,000 Yemeni children already have died of starvation. More than a million Yemenis are infected with cholera. Yemen is already the world’s worst humanitarian disaster, and the looming battle for Hodeida could make that disaster far worse.

Western media haven’t yet paid extensive attention, so don’t feel neglectful if much of this is news to you.

But the magnitude of the suffering and a larger geopolitical struggle could raise the profile of the Yemenis and their plight. The war in Yemen has become a proxy conflict pitting Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, both longtime U.S. allies, against Iran, which Riyadh accuses of actively helping the Houthi rebels. The Saudis say Iran has been supplying the missiles Houthi forces are using to strike targets on Saudi territory. Saudi and Emirati fighter jets, meanwhile, have been behind a relentless bombing campaign against Houthi rebels that has killed thousands of Yemeni civilians.

The United States is not a bystander in this crisis. Washington provides intelligence, munitions and aerial refueling for Saudi and UAE fighter jets. Since taking office, President Donald Trump has sought even closer ties with Riyadh. So it comes as no surprise that the Trump administration has said little about the peril Yemen’s people face.

But the U.S. can’t afford to stay silent as the suffering intensifies. If it does, it risks accusations of complicity in the horror unfolding in Yemen. “The U.S. already has blood on its hand in the Yemen crisis,” The Washington Post quoted U.S. Rep. Ted Lieu, D-Calif., as saying earlier this month. “We should not make them even bloodier.”

The Trump administration has enough sway with the Saudi and Emirati regimes to make the case for a halt to the offensive on Hodeida. If pushy diplomacy doesn’t work, the U.S. has another card to play — shutting down military support that Riyadh and Abu Dhabi need to fight the Houthis.

The alternative, allowing this mass starvation to intensify, cannot be an option.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

In the upside-down thinking of affirmative-action advocates, academically rigorous schools should be more focused on achieving racial balance and less focused on maintaining high standards. Asian displays of academic excellence therefore become problematic. Asians are somehow to blame for outperforming others, and they are to be punished for the historical injustices that blacks suffered at the hands of whites. This is what happens when you try to reconcile what is irreconcilable: group preferences on the one hand and equal treatment of individuals on the other.

But New York Mayor Bill de Blasio’s decision to call for an end to (the entrance exam for top public high schools), instead of calling for better test preparation, is also revealing. What he and other critics of selective schools are saying is that these low-income black and Latino kids will never measure up, so we must stop trying to measure them.

The mayor and his allies seem to have given up on the very students they claim to be helping. How, exactly, you help one group by holding it to lower standards than other groups isn’t clear. Deciding which groups deserve special treatment is also problematic. Schools today that are considered “too Asian” were in times past branded “too white” or “too Jewish.”

Republicans have long criticized Democrats for dividing the country into competing grievance groups. Some now realize that the Republican analogue has been to divide the country into radically autonomous individuals based on a cartoonish misreading of libertarianism that replaces the free markets and free minds of Friedrich Hayek with the greed and hubris of Gordon Gekko. But that is changing quickly. There is a renewed emphasis on addressing America and Americans as a community characterized by fraternal bonds and mutual responsibility — what Lincoln called the “mystic chords of memory.”

(Donald) Trump tapped into this. Most Republicans accept his transgressive personality and his intentional tweaking of social and political norms because they see it as in service of those larger ideas. ... Issues of citizenship and solidarity — that is to say, asking what it means to be an American — have returned to the fore. ...

Yes, the victories won in 2016 can be reversed, but only by voters at the polls and not by any of the irregular means that occupy the fantasies of many people who still can’t believe that their side lost. Persuasion still matters. ... For Republicans, this should be a back-to-basics election. Talk about principles, not just tactics. Talk about America. If Republicans really want to win, then their pronouns must be we, us and our, and they have to make sure that the people who hear them know that they are included in we, us and our.

Demographers forecast a steep population decline for Japan this century. The Japanese Statistics Bureau estimates that the Japanese population will fall to just over 100 million by 2050, from around 127 million today. The United Nations estimates that Japan’s population will decline by a third from current levels, to 85 million, by 2100. That would make it the fastest-contracting country among the world’s 30 most populous nations.

How low can it go? At the pace of decline projected by the U.N., and assuming no change in migration or fertility rates, the Japanese population would fall to 8.5 million by 2300. By 2800, it would be less than 2 million. The laws of math mean it would decline very slowly from there. ...

(T)o truly solve Japan’s population problem, it will need to embrace immigrants in a way it never has before. If it doesn’t, some day there may be barely any Japanese left at all.

Ditch the test

The University of Chicago deserves praise for eliminating the ACT/SAT hurdle in its admissions process. So do other fine Chicago-area schools with test-optional policies such as DePaul University and Lake Forest College. They join more than 1,000 accredited, bachelor-degree granting colleges and universities that will evaluate applicants without regard to standardized exam results. Independent research shows that dropping testing requirements results in increased campus diversity with no loss of academic quality.

Though these institutions demonstrate that test scores are not needed for high-quality undergraduate admissions, some insist that the ACT and SAT still are useful for assessing public education (e.g., your June 20 editorial). But that argument ignores the fact that neither test was designed to measure students’ mastery of high school curricula. Nor were they validated for that purpose. All the ACT and SAT claim to do is predict first-year college grades, a task they do less well than high school grades.

States included the ACT/SAT in school testing programs because of lobbying from the standardized exam industry. There’s no evidence that they measure academic performance fairly or accurately, let alone help improve it.

Illinois policymakers should follow the example of higher education leaders and drop any requirements to take the ACT or SAT.

Custody battle

In the June 17 article “Study: Divorced dads in Ill. rank low on time with kids,” the Tribune has furthered a widespread falsehood about fathers, mothers and child custody. The article reports on a study which claims to have measured the “amount of custody time dads get to spend with kids” in all 50 states. Since it would be remarkably difficult to acquire such information, I was curious to learn where the study’s data came from. Upon reviewing the methodology section of the study, it became clear that the percentages, which the authors assert reflect courts’ awards of custodial time to dads, reflect nothing of the kind. In fact, they may demonstrate the opposite of their claim.

The study indicates that its asserted percentages are based on: 1) some states’ standard generic guidelines for custodial/visitation time; and 2) some unquantified, unidentified lawyers’ anecdotes. With regard to the first, standard guidelines for custodial and noncustodial parents are gender-neutral; either a father or a mother can be a noncustodial parent who is awarded 35 percent of the time. Yet the study treats these guidelines as representing dads’ time. In other words, the authors are assuming their own conclusion: that dads are always awarded less custodial time than moms. In fact, reliable research indicate the opposite: Contrary to widespread misconceptions, dads win custody in court more often than mothers. (It should be noted that most parents settle custody matters out of court; such agreements often allow the mother, who is typically the primary caregiver, to retain primary care.)

The second data source, anecdotal evidence from lawyers, is neither objective, scientific nor generalizable – and therefore cannot support the study’s bald claims of bias against fathers.

The canard that fathers are cheated in custody cases has outlived its usefulness and any shred of former truth. National media need to more carefully review statistical claims on the subject.

Setting priorities

There’s a backlog. A backlog of asylum applications. A backlog of rape kits. A backlog of Medicaid applications. A backlog of public defender cases. A backlog in school maintenance.

The backlog illustrates the priorities of politically powerful people. Our systems are not serving us because we are not allocating resources for smooth operations. Our neglect is cruel. We’re ignoring our women, our poor people, our immigrants, our kids — the most vulnerable among us.

We have the capacity to clear the backlog. We’re just choosing not to.
— Anna Carvlin, Blue Island

Illinois’ choice

Let me ponder this question: Which ultra-rich candidate for governor, Gov. Bruce Rauner or J.B. Pritzker, is going to best identify with the needs of my middle-class brethren and me?

Surely, those individuals who have amassed millions of dollars would not have been heavily invested in ordinary wants and needs of the economically struggling masses. Therefore, it is a mystery to me as to why they now want to serve the public.

Still another question: What could Rauner or Pritzker hope to gain in his quest to govern millions of people with whom he couldn’t possibly relate?

Is it, therefore, possible, that millions of dollars is what it takes to convince voters who is qualified (or not) to run our state? (Especially in a state that has been without a balanced budget for a veritable eternity.)

Oh — what a choice.
— Mel Novit, Morton Grove

Same old story

I’m giving Gov. Bruce Rauner and J.B. Pritzker both an honorary Moutza (sorry John Kass) because they both deserve to share it for starting their campaign ads in June. This indicates to me that they are so out of touch with the good people of Illinois that they think it’s a good idea to flood the airwaves with the same negative ads that we watched from May 2017 to the primary.

These ads show us the tapes, the toilets, the inability to govern, the negatively that we all have memorized by now. We want to know their plans to fix pensions, the exodus from Illinois, taxes, education, immigration, jobs, voting rights, gerrymandering, term limits, and so much more. That is their job when running for office.

Bruce and J.B.: Save your millions on ads, telephoning and billboards. We already know you. Yes, yes we do.
— Wendy Smith, Chicago

The honest truth

When I was young, my father told me that “you have to stand by what you say, so that’s why you should speak the truth.” Liars are not trustworthy, and without trust, there is no support for a relationship. Being a good son, as much as it hurt at times, I learned that telling the truth is important. I have passed this on to my son and daughter. Speak the truth, because your word is your bond. You shame yourself if you get caught in a lie. If people lie to you, then they aren’t worthy of your trust and friendship.

Liars lie to manipulate you with their own best interests in mind and not yours. The lies are corrosive to maintaining a relationship. Liars often lie to make themselves look good and to make others look bad. Tearing others down to build oneself up is hardly the foundation for a good relationship with anyone. It’s actually a form of anti-social behavior.

We have a president who exaggerates, misstates and outright lies. The remarkable thing is the volume of lies and that he’ll lie about anything that elevates his image, no matter how trivial the lie may be. The volume of lying is important, because repetition reinforces the lie and drowns out the truth. I learned from my father that this is behavior I should not reward with my trust and friendship. This person doesn’t care about me. He’s manipulating for his own purposes, not for the benefit of others.

Unfortunately, because it is the president who is telling lies, he is fundamentally destroying trust in the government he leads. He doesn’t care about others, so he doesn’t care what harm he does to a system of government that has sustained our country for over 200 years. Is Donald Trump more important than our republic?

What amazes me is that a large group of people have either never learned what lying does to a relationship or are willing to look past being manipulated because they are willing to believe the lies for their own gain. It’s all about “winning.” If this is the case, then shame on the liar and those willingly accepting the lies. They need to be called out and shamed for every lie, every day.

A revelatory Rossini

Muti and Wolfe guide orchestra, chorus in stirring Stabat Mater

BY JOHN VON RHEIN
Chicago Tribune

Riccardo Muti has yet to lead the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a concert performance of any Rossini opera. If he is thinking about doing so before he steps down at the end of the 2021-22 season, may I suggest he conduct the complete “Guglielmo Tell,” Rossini’s final opera, all four hours of it? A budget-conscious management surely would balk at the idea, but what an event that would be!

Thursday night’s CSO season finale under Muti’s direction was a grand Rossini event in its own right: the first performance by the orchestra and Chicago Symphony Chorus in nearly 25 years of Gioachino Rossini’s Stabat Mater. A packed Orchestra Hall audience that included several hundred delegates to the national conference of Chorus America shouted its appreciation. And rightly so, for the sacred masterpiece drew as revelatory a performance as anything the music director has presented in Chicago.

As a matter of fact, the entire concert carried a distinct sense of occasion. It tied a bow on the seasonlong celebration of director Duain Wolfe’s superb choral organization and, simultaneously, honored the 150th anniversary of Rossini’s death. The program also held the belated CSO premiere of a fascinating rarity for voices and orchestra by Luigi Cherubini, an older contemporary of Rossini’s whose music Muti has long advocated.

Carlo Maria Giulini introduced Rossini’s setting of the medieval Latin poem about the grieving Virgin Mary at the cross of Jesus into the CSO repertory in 1972. Since then, the orchestra and chorus had presented the Stabat Mater only once, and that was nearly 25 years ago. So this remarkable work, which in many ways anticipates the Requiem that Verdi would write more than 30 years later, was long overdue on the downtown series.

The Stabat Mater is a long-standing Muti specialty, and the combination of passion and spirituality he brought to it on Thursday well served a piece that often suffers from being treated too operatically or cloaked in lethargic reverence. Tender and expressive word painting is crucial here, but so are dramatic urgency and depth. This performance had everything.

Under his precise direction, the chorus, vocal soloists and orchestra were as one, as they gave us imagery of suffering and sacrifice, to deeply moving effect. Muti’s pacing was ideal, each tempo feeling right unto itself and within a coherent whole. No living conductor articulates Rossinian rhythmic detail as stylishly as Muti. He understands that when Rossini marks fortissimo in the score, it’s not about loudness of sound on the outside but about intensity of feeling from within.

Such a performance could not have been achieved without so finely disciplined a chorus, or so strong and well-balanced a solo vocal quartet as one heard Thursday.

Soprano Krassimira Stoyanova and mezzo-soprano Ekaterina Gubanova blended their rich, vibrant voices beautifully in their duet, each singer excelling in her arias as well. Gubanova did nicely with her cavatina despite some flattening of pitch at the lower end of her range. Stoyanova sang a thrilling “Inflamatus,” which had the chorus evoking the terrible Day of Judgment against soprano-as-Mary’s faith and devotion.

At the very end of the “Sancta Mater” quartet, Stoyanova sang the brief cadenza Rossini wrote for Clara Novello, the famed soprano who took part in the Italian premiere of the Stabat Mater in Bologna in 1842.

Dmitry Korchak, well remembered for his superb Orphee in Lyric Opera’s production of Gluck’s “Orphee et Eurydice” last fall, delivered the famous tenor aria “Cujus animam gementem” (“Her spirit cried out”) with a stylish, sweet-toned legato, capping things off with a ringing high D flat.

Bass-baritone Eric Owens rose eloquently to his powerful aria “Eja mater” and the ensuing recitative with chorus. The light, crisp enunciation and soft dynamics of the chorus sopranos in the latter section attested to the superb discipline Wolfe has instilled in his 140 voices as a whole. Muti had them sing the “Quando corpus morietur” as a four-part chorus rather than as a solo vocal quartet. The gorgeous sound produced by the full chorus here sent shivers down my spine.

The first CSO performance of “Chant sur la Mort de Joseph Haydn,” Cherubini’s funeral lament for the Austrian composer

(who died in 1809, four years after Cherubini composed his dirge), made me wonder why this wonderful piece isn’t played more often. Scored for soprano, two tenors and orchestra, the 20-minute cantata sounds a lot like Haydn but the dominant voice is Cherubini’s. Stoyanova and Korchak sang superbly, as did Enea Scala on the second tenor part.

The orchestra and a chorus numbering roughly 70 voices began the concert with Mozart’s stand-alone Kyrie (K.341). The somber mood of this brief but powerful piece anticipates that of the composer’s Requiem, with which it shares the key of D minor. A fine performance set the tone of serious spiritual contemplation for the rest of the program.

In all, these concerts represent a special event no lover of great sacred music and great choral singing can afford to miss.

The program will be repeated at 8 p.m. Saturday and 3 p.m. Sunday at Symphony Center, 220 S. Michigan Ave.; $36-$250; 312-294-3000, www.cso.org.

Pianist Michael Weiss steps out of shadow

BY HOWARD REICH
Chicago Tribune

Chances are that if you heard powerhouse tenor saxophonist Johnny Griffin in the late 1980s and ’90s, you also encountered Michael Weiss at the piano.

Keeping up with the volcanic saxophonist could not have been an easy task, but Weiss did it with alacrity. Those sessions that Griffin, Weiss and friends played annually at the Jazz Showcase — where former Chicagoan Griffin returned each year from his home in France — stand as high points of that era.

So hearing Weiss open a two-night run Thursday at Winter’s Jazz Club couldn’t help but evoke memories of Griffin, the aptly named “Little Giant” who stood just 5 feet 5 inches but outplayed, outpowered and outsped practically anyone who put reed to lips. The question looming over Thursday’s first set was how Weiss would sound without the energy emanating from Griffin’s horn.

Quite persuasive, as it turned out. For though Weiss didn’t aspire to achieve the velocity and force he summoned in Griffin’s company, that probably would have been a futile task in a piano trio setting, anyway. Instead, Weiss produced the keyboard clarity and fluidity one has come to expect from him, and considerable harmonic sophistication.

Many signatures of Weiss’ pianism, as well as the influences of his years with Griffin, were evident in the opening selection, “Some Other Spring,” a ballad widely associated with Billie Holiday. But Weiss offered a rather different approach, taking a brisk tempo and running fast figurations along the full stretch of the keyboard. The nimbleness of Weiss’ technique was matched by the intellectual heft of his ideas, a sure reflection of Griffin’s impact on his art. With George Fludas powering the music forward on drums and Jake Vinsel providing firm sonic underpinning on bass, Weiss was airborne practically from the start.

But the greatest revelations came from Weiss’ original compositions, which pushed beyond Griffin’s tutelage into unabashedly idiosyncratic chord structures. Each work conjured a distinct world of sound, a testament to the nature of Weiss’ imagination. Among the most appealing was “El Camino,” from Weiss’ 2003 “Soul Journey” album, the pianist-composer producing one harmonic surprise after another. The Latin rhythmic undercurrent provided another layer of interest, as did the bursts of color and dissonance that Weiss articulated

That set the stage for “Power Station,” another Weiss original, its rhythmic swagger attractive from its opening bars. Here Weiss’ florid pianism, drummer Fludas’ fat downbeats and bassist Vinsel’s sizable tone made for the most vivid statement of the show.

Among other Weiss originals, “La Ventana” emerged as a study in rhythmic tension; “Second Thoughts” attested to the close musical relationship between Weiss and Fludas; and “Soul Journey” unfolded in one long, subtle, sustained crescendo culminating in a surprise ending.

Weiss and colleagues ventured into a couple of standards, as well, building on Afro-Caribbean rhythm in Ray Bryant’s “Cubano Chant” and constantly changing textures in Hoagy Carmichael’s “Skylark” (with deft brushwork from drummer Fludas).

True, occasionally the trio pushed volume levels a bit beyond the capacity of Winter’s intimate listening space. And a bona fide acoustic grand piano would have served Weiss’ touch and tone better than the room’s electronic-hybrid instrument.

Even within these limitations, though, there was no doubting the craft and integrity of Weiss’ work, which has matured significantly over time.

Singer Maud Hixson performs at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. Saturday at Winter’s Jazz Club, 465 N. McClurg Court (on the promenade); $20-$25; 312-344-1270 or www.wintersjazzclub.com.

“Jurassic World”

Back on Isla Nublar, the toothsome meat- and plant-eaters cloned for adventure park fun and profit are threatened with extinction thanks to a newly active volcano. A kindly colleague of the original park’s inventor (played by James Cromwell) wants to bankroll the rescue of the surviving dinosaurs, which he plans to relocate to a sanctuary. But with the master on his deathbed, a weaselly factotum (Rafe Spall) schemes to sell the newly weaponized creatures to the highest international bidder. Chris Pratt and Bryce Dallas Howard are back, running, running, making eyes, making the best of their semidisposable plot machines disguised as characters, and generally lightening a heavy digital effects load. PG-13, 2d/0, action

CHRIS JONES THEATER

“Guards at the Taj”

Rajiv Joseph’s play, “Guards at the Taj,” is steeped in the myths surrounding the building of the Taj Mahal, the wondrous mausoleum in the Indian city of Agra. Steppenwolf’s Amy Morton directed this play’s world premiere in New York — the show now in the Upstairs Theatre restages that 2015 production, replete with its two original stars, Omar Metwally and Arian Moayed. In Joseph’s black comedy, they play guards, guys in the margins. Through July 22 in the Steppenwolf Upstairs Theatre, 1650 N. Halsted St.; $20-$94 at 312-335-1650 and www.steppenwolf.org

Bissett returns to romantic mix in ‘Wedding March 4’

By Rick Bentley
Tribune News Service

Josie Bissett is so in love with being part of the “Wedding March” movies for the Hallmark Channel, she’s starring in the fourth film in the series. “Wedding March 4: Something Old, Something New” debuts Saturday.

The “Melrose Place” star loves the franchise, though she admits there’s one thing she would change about the movies’ tales of romance and marriage.

Her first love with the series is her co-star, Jack Wagner (“When Calls the Heart”). They are back playing Mick and Olivia, the pair who operate the most beautiful place to hold a wedding this side of Cupid’s backyard.

Merritt Patterson (“The Royals”) and Andrew W. Walker (“My Secret Valentine”) portray a couple about to be married at the Vermont inn if the bride can stop trying to please everyone else with her ever-changing plans.

At the same time, Mick and Olivia find it difficult to find a few moments for their own romance.

Wagner, who is also the executive producer of the films, had not found his lead actress when the first movie got the go-ahead from Hallmark.

As soon as he thought of Bissett, he knew she would be the perfect person to handle both the comedy and drama of the role.

“He contacted me through Twitter direct message,” Bissett says. “I never look at that, so I think it was months before I saw it. It didn’t surprise me that he contacted me that way. That’s just him.”

The pair had only shared a few lines on “Melrose Place,” but Bissett finds the working relationship with Wagner to be incredibly comfortable. That comfort comes from knowing Wagner for so many years, and how perfectly matched Olivia and Mick are in the movies.

Working with Wagner would be enough to make “Wedding March” movies a joy for her, but Bissett also loves that each episode is full of the love and romance that goes with weddings.

The wedding movies have left a mark. It was less than a year ago that Bissett and Thomas Doig were married at a chateau in the Pacific Northwest that looks a lot like the setting for “Wedding March.”

Bissett was a calm bride. “One, I have done it before. I was not in the moment in my first wedding because I was so worried about everything,” Bissett says. “I vowed I would not do that again. I worried about nothing and just enjoyed everything.”

“And, the ‘Wedding March’ movies helped because I got engaged while I was doing them. In the script, a bride would be obsessing about her invitations and I would think, ‘That’s right. I have to get invitations.’”

Along with handling wedding issues, Olivia must deal with the news her daughter, Grace (Emily Tennant), and Grace’s boyfriend, Eric (Blair Penner), have decided to get married. But Eric is going on tour with his band and Grace’s decision makes Olivia recall her own choice when Mick left to go on tour at the beginning of their relationship.

“I have loved being a mom so much. I have loved playing a mom,” says Bissett, a mother of two in real life. “Olivia is full of emotions that she went through but doesn’t want to control her daughter. Everybody evolves in the script the way real humans do.”

There’s only one flaw in this paradise. Bissett is convinced the franchise is strong enough to be a weekly series rather than a series of movies.

“I am getting to that point in my life where I would like to settle into another series. My son is going off to college and my daughter is 16,” Bissett says. “The only thing is, the series would have to shoot in Canada (where all ‘The Wedding March’ movies have filmed) because it is a two-hour drive for me.”

Vegas wedding leads to work dust-up

Dear Amy: A work friend was getting married, and she decided to have her wedding in Las Vegas. I was not able to attend, but I made her bridal veil and participated in a group gift from work friends.

Afterward, she sent a group email at work, thanking all of her “true friends” that “bothered to come to the wedding.” I received no thank-you for making the veil.

I am hurt and feel like confronting her, but I’m not sure what to do.

— Jilted Friend

Dear Jilted: You are right, and the bride is wrong; wedding etiquette (and general decency) states that the bride and groom should send a thank-you note for any gift they receive. That includes a veil. However, I don’t think you should hold your breath. You may have to stand in line behind other colleagues who want to react to her rudeness.

Her choice to passively-aggressively email her co-workers (presumably through your work email system) about an out-of-town NON-work event is a poor one, and this could end up damaging her.

Think about it: You considered her a friend and you would like to confront her about her behavior. Imagine how others felt receiving this email — people who weren’t on the best terms with her before this hit their inbox, some of whom may control her daily workload. Or people who did go to her wedding, who have now been roped into an email argument and are now deleting cute wedding pics from social media.

Perhaps your HR representative saw the email and would like to give this no-longer-blushing bride a gentle reminder about the office code of conduct.

I get that you’re hurt, but don’t make the same mistake your colleague made and play this out at work. Instead, downgrade this relationship status from “work friendship” to “civil co-worker,” and remember this feeling: Use it as a reminder to express your thanks, in writing, to others quickly and appropriately in the future.

Dear Amy: A couple months ago I broke up with my boyfriend of two years for someone else. I now see this as the biggest mistake of my life.

How do I convince my hesitant ex that we’re still meant to be together?

— Stuck in Love

Dear Stuck: First, I sincerely hope that you have apologized for the way you treated the man you dumped for someone else. If not, saying sorry is an important first step. A letter (or email) is a good way to do this. Keep it simple: Express your sorrow and regret over your behavior, and tell him you hope he can find it in his heart to forgive you. Tell him you miss him, and ask if he would be willing to meet you for coffee. Write it out, read it several times and wait a couple of days before sending.

Put yourself in his shoes: He got dumped and he has tried to move on, which can be a very difficult process. Now here you come, strolling down apology lane, claiming you’ve made a mistake.

While you are convinced that the two of you are meant to be together, your ex may disagree.

If you are serious about trying to revive your relationship, you will need to be respectful of his feelings and move at his pace. Leaving him for someone else is a serious breach of trust, and your ex may not feel like he can ever trust you again. Give him time to consider your apology.

Equally important, you need to accept the fact that you may never win him back. If he decides he doesn’t want to be together, you must respect his wishes. Wondering and worrying is the price you will pay for your behavior.

Dear Amy: “Sad Mom/Grandma” was devastated by her kids’ inattention on Mother’s Day. She wants to be reimbursed for “services rendered” — cooking 100,000 meals over the years, etc. Her adult children seemed to do the minimum on this day.

I would rather get calls and visits throughout the year than an obligatory dinner on Mother’s Day.

Luckily, I get both.

— Happy

Dear Happy: Mother’s Day is an emotionally loaded day for mothers, stepmothers and the kids they raise. I understood this woman’s desire for a modest celebration, other than what she described as “obligatory” phone calls. I hope she gets what she wants.

WATCH THIS: SATURDAY

Selena Gomez

“2018 Radio Disney Music Awards” (7 p.m., 8:30 p.m., Disney): Selena Gomez, Marshmello, Maren Morris and the South Korean boy band BTS lead the field of nominees with four nods apiece in this year’s honors as selected via online voting by young fans. Meghan Trainor, Maddie Poppe, Echosmith and Charlie Puth are scheduled to perform during this two-hour special.

“Sesame Street” (8 a.m., HBO): They could have entitled this new episode “Martial Arts Muppets,” but instead they went with “Abby and Zoe Love Karate,” a delightful half-hour in which those two characters discover that girls as well as boys can benefit from learning martial arts.

“Race to Witch Mountain” (9:03 a.m., 5:19 p.m., Starz): A couple of 1970s Disney fantasies get an update in this enjoyable adventure. AnnaSophia Robb (“Bridge to Terabithia”) and Alexander Ludwig play teenagers with special abilities that quickly become evident to the cabbie (Dwayne “The Rock” Johnson) they enlist to help them get away from government forces. The special effects are much improved from the time when the central roles belonged to Kim Richards and Ike Eisenmann, who have cameos here.

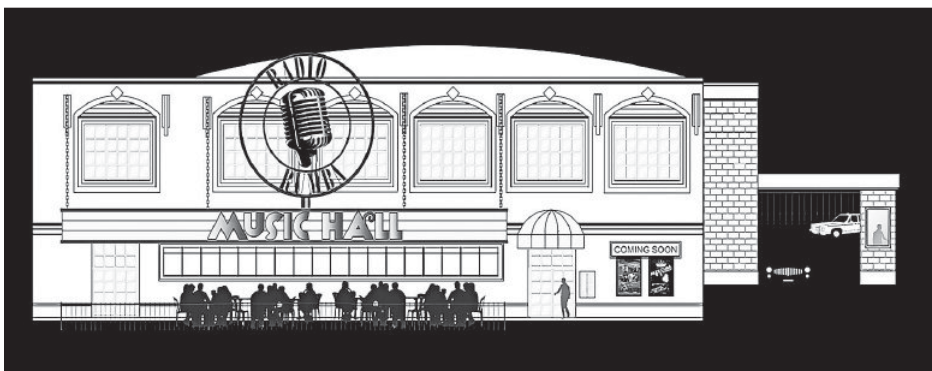

“Kingsman: The Golden Circle” (7 p.m., 11:40 p.m., HBO): Matthew Vaughn’s 2017 sequel to his blockbuster 2014 action comedy “Kingsman: The Secret Service” opens a year after the events of the first film, with Eggsy Unwin (Taron Egerton) now a full-fledged part of the Kingsman, having taken his late mentor Harry’s (Colin Firth) title of Galahad. As he prepares to confront major drug cartel leader Poppy Adams (Julianne Moore), however, Eggsy receives surprising news about Harry’s true fate.

“The Carey Treatment” (7 p.m., TCM): Adapted from a suspense novel written under a pseudonym by Michael Crichton, this 1972 mystery about a Boston pathologist (James Coburn) seeking to clear a surgical colleague (James Hong) unjustly accused of an illegal procedure was directed by Blake Edwards, but when production was completed, the studio seized control and re-edited the film over the director’s objections. He later got revenge, however, satirizing the experience in his savage 1981 comedy “S.O.B.” Jennifer O’Neill, Pat Hingle and Skye Aubrey also star.

“Love Means Zero” (8 p.m., 9:30 p.m., Showtime): Filmmaker Jason Kohn serves up an excellent pun in the title for his 2017 tennis-themed documentary, which profiles controversial former coach Nick Bollettieri, a notoriously thin-skinned personality. More specifically, however, the main subject that eventually emerges is the complicated surrogate father-and-son relationship that developed between Bollettieri and his most famous pupil, Andre Agassi.

Radio Rumba, a concert hall/supper club, is expected to open next summer.

Group planning to open club in Humboldt Park

By SAVANNAH EADENS
Chicago Tribune

At Division Street and Western Avenue, where Humboldt Park borders Wicker Park and West Town, there is a “mezcla” of Latin American and Caribbean cultures, one that a development group believes is the perfect spot for a Latin concert hall and supper club.

Division Street Hospitality Group has plans to open a $10.5 million Caribbean-inspired venue, Radio Rumba, at 2435 W. Division.

The group — Edwin Rios, former owner of the now-closed River North Latin club Rumba, real estate developer David Herrera and marketing professional Cesar Rolon — has Latin-Caribbean and community ties.

Herrera grew up in the West Town neighborhood and says their space will be a Latin version of Chicago’s House of Blues.

“I want to give back to the people and the culture I am a part of,” Herrera said.

“I am a stakeholder of the neighborhood and I want to invest in it.”

Herrera says Radio Rumba will be remodeled from the current Reban Church at the heart of Paseo Boricua area.

The proposed concert hall and supper club will be the start of the project, which the developers hope will include a rum distillery, live comedy theater and radio station.

“We will feature music and artists from all over Latin America,” said Rolon, who is Puerto Rican.

Too often, corporations come into neighborhoods like Humboldt Park with no intention of serving the community, said Amy Vega, former president of the Humboldt Park Advisory Council, who supports the Radio Rumba project.

“These are people who are in tune with grass-roots activities that are happening (in Humboldt Park), so it is accessible for residents and the community to talk to them about the project,” said Vega.

Part of the plan is to also to hire employees from within the community as much as possible.

The group is currently applying for city tax increment financing funding on top of soliciting private investments for the estimated project, which is tentatively set to open in summer 2019.

Royal George main stage revival starts with ‘Woman in Black’ in fall

By CHRIS JONES
Chicago Tribune

After a long period of inactivity, the main stage of Chicago’s Royal George Theatre is roaring back to life this fall with a new commercial

Horoscopes

Today's birthday (June 23): This year favors fun, family and romance. Refine your collaboration for shared benefit. Team surprises change the score. A personal project takes off this summer before joint finances require attention and you generate a money boom.

Pull together and grow stronger. Love is the bottom line.

Aries (March 21-April 19): Today is a 7. Focus on shared finances. The status quo gets turned upside down. That sheds light on a power issue. Don't jump to conclusions.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): 6. Breakdowns could frustrate your collaboration. Avoid expensive arguments or conflict. Find what you need nearby. Stick to routines, and wait for developments.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): 8. Workout routines and practices energize you. Your diligence is respected. Slow to avoid accidents. Avoid overextending your capacities.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): 7. Romantic surprises could disrupt your schedule. Worrying about money makes zero difference. Prioritize fun (after chores are done). Find ways to economize.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): 6. Imagine your dream home. Envision the perfect space and functionality. Set goals and add improvements steadily over time. Start with basics.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): 7. Wait for temporary confusion or misunderstanding to pass. Continue to keep your word. Resolution arises in communication.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): 7. Resist the temptation to throw your money around. Proceed with caution. Stick to practical expenses and improvements. Only get what you need.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): 9. Provide leadership. Conditions seem unsettled. Stay objective in a tense situation. Don't blindly react to ongoing changes. Get another perspective. Wait for developments.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): 6. Plan more before launching into action. Find a peaceful spot to review logistics and probabilities. What's missing? Save money and time with advance consideration.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): 7. Managing a group project could be like trying to herd cats. Take charge of one aspect to provide structural support. Avoid irritations.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): 8. Check work orders for changes. Keep backups of important documents and data. Values could get tested. Hold your temper, and plug a leak.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): 7. Consider conditions before dashing off. Review alternate routes to an educational destination. Unconsidered expenses change your options.

Expert partnerships have special agreements about handling certain rare situations. They hope to have a big advantage when that situation comes up. South knew what partner's suit was so he bid it at the five level, hoping his partner would raise if he held a spade control. The opportunity to use this North-South agreement about the meaning of four clubs will occur, we imagine, less than once per century. How did it work out on this deal?

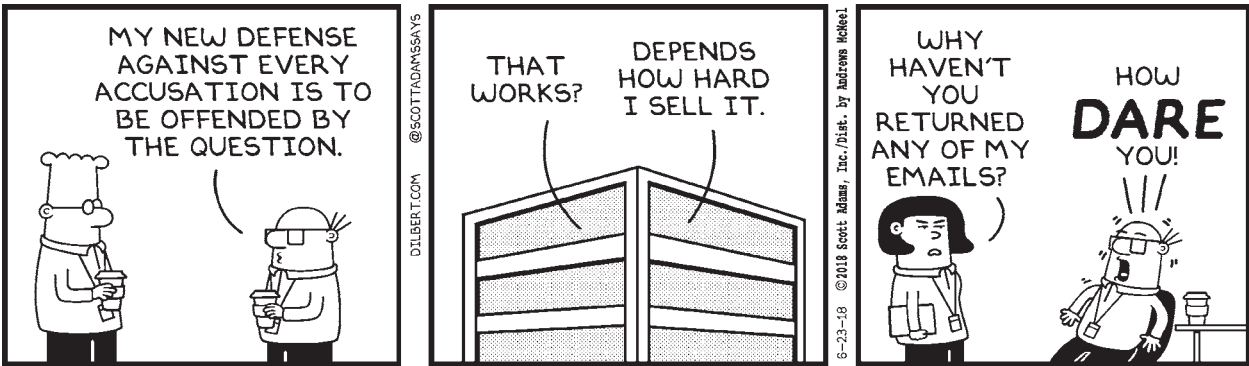

It might have worked fine except that East made a Lightner Double, asking for an unusual lead. West had no trouble finding the club lead for East to ruff.

East cashed the ace of spades and led a spade to West's king, and West's shift to the king of diamonds killed the late entry to the club suit. South tried to cash the queen of spades, but West ruffed it. South over-ruffed in dummy, but had to lose a diamond trick later in the hand for down two.

In case you're wondering if the contract would have succeeded if the man who held eight trumps were declarer, it wouldn't have. The ace of spades followed by the two of spades would surely have seen East get a club ruff for down one. Maybe it will work better next century.

On the Bulls

Bulls can use some legitimate star power

Rebuild will depend on younger players making breakthroughs

If the Bulls wanted, they could trot out an opening-night lineup of Kris Dunn, Zach LaVine, Chandler Hutchison, Lauri Markkanen and Wendell Carter Jr.

Time, training camp and the talents of Robin Lopez and Justin Holiday will tell. But the point is the Bulls now have five young pieces covering each position — four coming from the Jimmy Butler trade, one from dealing Nikola Mirotic — and projected maximum salary-cap space for either this summer or next.

Unlike last season, the Bulls will be trying to win games next season. Executive vice president John Paxson has said he can't live through another season of tanking, er, player development. But the Bulls very well could be back in the draft lottery next year, which would net another nice young player.

But the NBA is about star power. Much of it resides in the Bay Area, but some of the younger variety is developing in Boston and the biggest star, LeBron James, is set to choose his next employer in July free agency.

Where's the Bulls' star? "You hope you draft players who can become stars," Paxson said. "We believe Lauri has the potential, (but) he has a long way to go.

"When you get your asset base up, you can wait for opportunities

NHL DRAFT

Blue-line special

Hawks take righty, lefty defensemen in draft's 1st round

By JIMMY GREENFIELD
Chicago Tribune

Standing pat never has been Blackhawks general manager Stan Bowman's thing, but the allure of grabbing a dynamic prospect without having to give up anything in return proved too great to pass up.

In stark contrast to last year, when Bowman's stunning trades of Artemi Panarin and Niklas Hjalmarsson defined the first day of the NHL draft, this year it was quiet — at least publicly.

The Blackhawks selected Swedish defenseman Adam Boqvist eighth overall Friday, perhaps a bit of a surprise with defenseman Evan Bouchard and forward Oliver Wahlstrom still on the draft board. But Boqvist shouldn't be considered a reach, and Bowman said they got their man.

"We were hoping we were going to get him," Bowman said. "So I'm pleasantly surprised, I guess, but not shocked. The first (seven) picks went sort of how we expected. We were just hoping that nobody was going to grab him."

Bowman was upbeat after drafting Boqvist and then another defenseman, Canadian Nicolas Beaudin, at No. 27.

"Adam has elite offensive ability," he said. "He compares him-

CINCINNATI — As ballparks go, Great American Ball Park doesn't really live up to its name.

It's one of those modern-day stadiums that tries to look retro but has nothing really special to hang its hat on.

On the Cubs

But things haven't been so great for the Cubs at Great American in 2018, and Friday's 6-3 loss to the Reds was another kick in the head for a team coming off of a two-day high at Wrigley Field.

They managed only four hits off Luis Castillo and the Reds' bullpen in losing for the second straight night.

Worth the wait

Coutinho, Neymar score in stoppage time for Brazil

Associated Press

After more than 90 minutes of aggravation and exasperation, Neymar and Brazil finally broke through Costa Rica's smothering defense.

Philippe Coutinho scored in the first minute of stoppage time, and Neymar followed six minutes later to give Brazil a 2-0 victory over Costa Rica in St. Petersburg, Russia, on Friday at the World Cup.

Unlike Argentina and Lionel Messi, Brazil is still in a good position to advance to the round of 16. Costa Rica has been eliminated.

"The responsibility is huge when you are playing for the national team," Coutinho said. "You have to be mentally strong from the beginning until the end. We fought until the end and we were rewarded."

Neymar dropped to his knees after the final whistle, sobbing in his hands as his teammates surrounded him and then lifted him off the ground.

"We know he had a difficult injury, he went through a very bad patch," Coutinho said through an interpreter, referring to Neymar breaking a bone in his right foot four months ago. "But his joy at being on the pitch is contagious."

A few minutes before the end, Neymar flopped backward to initially earn a penalty, but the contact was so exaggerated that the referee reversed the call after using video review. Neymar then angrily punched the ball a short time later as Costa Rica's players tried to waste time. It earned Brazil's biggest star a yellow card.

"The joy, the satisfaction and the pride of representing the national team is a lot," Brazil coach Tite said, defending Neymar. "He has the responsibility, the pressure. Everyone shows it in their own way."

Neymar seemed panicked for most of the second half as his shots sailed over the bar or simply missed the mark, and he complained over nearly every call. In danger of ending in a draw, Brazil seemed nervous but composed itself through the seven minutes of injury time.

Coutinho was first to get the ball past goalkeeper Keylor Navas. Rising superbly to meet a header from Marcelo's cross, Roberto Firmino nodded the ball down to striker Gabriel Jesus, who then flicked it to a sprinting Coutinho in the penalty area.

In the seventh minute of injury time, Douglas Costa whipped in a cross from the right and Neymar deftly tapped it into the net.

Both Firmino and Costa had come on as substitutes in the second half.

"I think Brazil's changes made an impact," Costa Rica coach Oscar Ramirez said. "It became very difficult for us."

Brazil has four points in Group E and plays Serbia in its final match in Moscow on Wednesday. Costa Rica has zero points and cannot advance.

After a drab and scrappy first half at St. Petersburg Stadium, Brazil came out energized and the chances piled up. Jesus put a header onto the crossbar, and Neymar's hurried shot curled wide.

In Brazil's opening 1-1 draw against Switzerland, Neymar had been fouled 10 times, sometimes harshly. But he was also in theatrical mode against Costa Rica, tumbling over dramatically when touched.

Switzerland 2, Serbia 1: Granit Xhaka and Xherdan Shaqiri scored in Switzerland's victory in Kaliningrad, and both celebrated by making a nationalist symbol to their ethnic Albanian heritage.

Both players put their open hands together with their thumbs locked and fingers outstretched to make what looks like the double-headed eagle displayed on Albania's national flag. The thumbs represent the heads of the two eagles, while the fingers look like the feathers.

Shaqiri was born in Kosovo, the former Serbian province that declared independence in 2008. Serbia doesn't recognize Kosovo's independence and relations between the two countries remain tense. Xhaka's parents are originally from Kosovo and they are of Albanian heritage. His brother plays for Albania's national team.

Aleksandar Mitrovic scored for Serbia with a header in the fifth minute.

Nigeria 2, Iceland 0: Ahmed Musa scored two second-half goals to help the Nigerians win in Volgograd to move into second place in the group behind already-qualified Croatia.

Musa gave Nigeria the lead in the 49th minute after Victor Moses sprinted deep into the Iceland half and curled a cross to the near post. Musa deftly controlled the ball before slamming it past Iceland keeper Hannes Halldorsson.

He doubled the lead in the 75th. Picking up the ball on the left side of the Iceland penalty area, Musa mazed his way past Halldorsson and picked his spot in the Iceland goal.

Rickettses looking to buy AC Milan

Cubs owners want controlling interest in Italian powerhouse

BY TIM BANNON
Chicago Tribune

The Ricketts family is interested in buying the Italian soccer club AC Milan, a source close to the potential transaction said.

The club's current owner is Chinese businessman Li Yonghong. According to Forbes, AC Milan is valued at $612 million.

The news came as Reuters reports that Li had failed to meet a deadline Friday for a $37 million payment due to the team.

The family, according to the source, wants "to acquire a controlling interest in AC Milan."

"They have a lot to offer the fans, the team and the city of Milan."

The Ricketts family is working with Morgan Stanley on the deal, Reuters also reported.

AC Milan was founded in 1899 and plays in Italy's top-tier league

Serie A.

Tom Ricketts' interest in soccer is nothing new.

In May, he and Chicago developer Sterling Bay said they were forming a joint venture to bring a United Soccer League expansion team to the planned Lincoln Yards commercial development along the Chicago River.

The Ricketts family bought the Cubs in 2009 from the Tribune Company.

BULLS

BULLS NOTES

To-do list will start with LaVine, Nwaba

But cap space could lead to other additions as free agency begins

By K.C. JOHNSON
Chicago Tribune

When NBA free agency begins at 11 p.m. June 30, the Bulls' initial focus will be on their own — namely re-signing restricted free agents Zach LaVine and David Nwaba.

The Bulls are expected to make a good-faith, proactive offer to LaVine, but if he seeks a maximum contract, he'll likely need to get an offer sheet. The Bulls are prepared for at least one Western Conference team to make a run at LaVine, for whom they can match any offer.

As for spending some of their projected $24 million or more of salary-cap space, the Bulls will take a patient approach to see if any attractive pieces fit their rebuild timeline.

"If there's value we think we can jump on, we'll explore that," executive vice president John Paxson said. "But we're in the beginning stages of this (rebuild)."

Another avenue the Bulls could explore is adding future assets, perhaps in the form of first-round picks, by absorbing a contract into their cap space via a trade. The Bulls still have roughly $8.9 million from a trade exception created in the Nikola Mirotic deal if they choose to utilize exceptions.

Rotation roulette: The Bulls' tentative depth chart shapes up as Kris Dunn and Cameron Payne at point guard; LaVine and a possibly re-signed Nwaba at shooting guard; Justin Holiday and Chandler Hutchison at small forward, with Denzel Valentine at both shooting guard and small forward; Lauri Markkanen and Bobby Portis at power forward; and Robin Lopez, Wendell Carter Jr. and Cristiano Felicio at center.

Omer Asik is a practice body and potential trade piece because his contract is guaranteed for only $3 million in 2019-20. Jerian Grant is either the third point guard or a candidate to be waived.

The Bulls are unlikely to extend Noah Vonleh a qualifying offer by his June 29 deadline. And Paul Zipser will almost certainly be waived before his $1.5 million deal becomes guaranteed July 18. Sean Kilpatrick is a long shot to return.

Layups: The 6-foot-10 Carter, whose wingspan measured 7-4½ at last month's NBA draft combine, averaged 2.1 blocks for Duke, a statistic in which the Bulls ranked 30th in the league last season. "Defensively, as a rim protector ... he's been taught really well in that area," Paxson said. "We know in our game today the bigs have to be able to step out on the perimeter and guard, but we think he can be really good." ... Loyola guard Donte Ingram, who played high school ball at Simeon, committed late Thursday night to play for the Bulls' summer-league team after he was not selected in the NBA draft.

Bulls' rebuild could use a little bit of star power to present themselves, maybe in a trade situation or (with) cap room and a free-agency situation. Those are other avenues, but right now drafting well is the stage we're in."

Indeed, it seemed fitting the Bulls selected Carter with the seventh pick, the same slot at which they acquired Kirk Hinrich in Paxson's first draft in 2003. Similar to that rebuild — which in 2004 produced first-round pick Ben Gordon, trade acquisition and lottery pick Luol Deng and second-round pick Chris Duhon — the Bulls are intent on building through the draft, with the occasional free-agent signing — Andres Nocioni back then — sprinkled in.

That era's teams never advanced past the second round of the playoffs, mostly because they never produced a transcendent star.

A final attempt to add one via free agency in Ben Wallace produced a first-round series victory but ultimately was a short-lived experiment. Paxson traded Wallace during Wallace's second season in Chicago.

The core of this team feels somewhat similar to that era, which featured a jump from 23-59 in 2003-04 to 47-35 the following season. Three straight playoff berths — but only one series victory — followed.

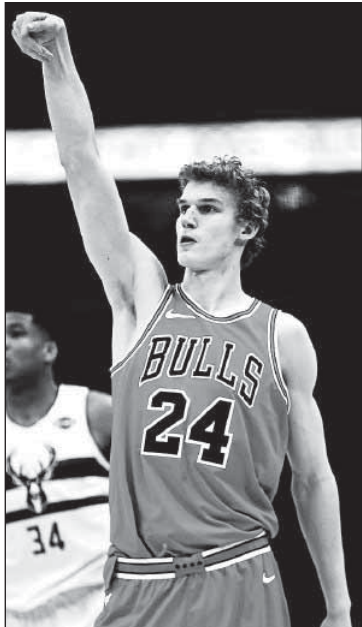

"We addressed two positions of need and got two players we feel fit us and (will) help us grow, hopefully quickly," Paxson said about Thursday night's picks. "Even though we're going to be patient, maybe (we can) grow more quickly than some teams in the past in these rebuilding situations. When you look at where we were a year ago, we feel we've added five really good young core pieces to build around."

"And we still have the core of our team intact. We're anticipating the young guys we have on this roster currently — Kris, Zach, Lauri, Denzel (Valentine), Bobby Portis (and) down the list — a lot will depend on their growth as players. We feel these two (new) players complement the roster we have very well."

Beyond the fact it takes two teams to consummate a trade, that's why the Bulls didn't trade up even a few spots to try to draft Marvin Bagley III, Jaren Jackson Jr. or Trae Young. Not only did they like Carter, trading up would have cost a future first-round pick.

Such a sacrifice doesn't square with the patient approach to the rebuild, which almost certainly will feature the Bulls focusing more on free agency in 2019 than this summer.

The Bulls also would like to point out that it's way too early to judge Carter and Hutchison. Perhaps one can become a star.

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The Bulls are pinning a lot of their future hopes on Lauri Markkanen, a first-team All-Rookie selection.

"Right now drafting well is the stage we're in."

— Bulls executive vice president John Paxson

"In Wendell's case, physically he looks like a man so maybe you don't see upside, (but) we think there is upside to him," general manager Gar Forman said.

"When you look at his analytics — we have 15 years of analytics in the draft — he's extremely high as far as efficiency."

Added Paxson: "He didn't get to showcase so much of his game when Bagley reclassified and then signed at Duke late. A lot of their offense would have run through Wendell this year had Marvin not gone there. The young man sacrificed a lot to be a good teammate. A lot of that speaks to who he is."

Carter just turned 19. Hutchison is 22 and a rare four-year college player who made a huge jump between his sophomore and senior seasons at Boise State.

"His ability to rebound and make plays are things that are really valuable in our game today, especially (with) the way we want to play with pace and up-tempo," Paxson said. "He fits."

"We think he can put it on the floor and create. His shot is getting better and better."

Again, time will tell if the Bulls get better and better. Those Hinrich-Gordon-Deng teams spectacularly flamed out with a 33-49 season in 2007-08 that led to the Bulls winning the draft lottery.

They selected Derrick Rose, the type of transcendent star the Bulls hope they either have in the making or eventually can acquire.

A'S 11-4, WHITE SOX 2-6

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

James Shields allowed eight runs — only two earned — as the Sox committed three errors in Friday's Game 1.

Some consolation

Giolito helps gain split after comedy of errors in Game 1

By PHIL THOMPSON
Chicago Tribune

A dismal opener to Friday's White Sox doubleheader against the Athletics ended on a high note with Lucas Giolito striking out a career-best-matching, season-high eight batters over seven-plus innings in the night game's 6-4 victory.

"Gio threw a heck of a game and we picked him up on defense," said shortstop Tim Anderson, who added an insurance run for the Sox in the eighth inning with a homer.

The day game, however, was a disaster.

James Shields' four-run second inning — with the A's getting help from the first of Yoan Moncada's two fielding errors — was just the tip of the iceberg for Shields' struggles and the Sox's multitude of defensive problems during an 11-2 loss.

The debacle ran their losing streak to a season-worst eight games. The Sox committed three errors and A's starter Sean Manaea struck out seven Sox.

"Little rough game," White Sox manager Rick Renteria said. "We have to put it behind us as quickly as possible.

"Obviously, James got hit around a little bit. Again, we didn't make some key plays there early and it kind of led to a couple of different things."

Shields gave up eight runs on five hits in 4²/₃ innings, but only two of the runs were earned.

"Overall, we didn't play very good baseball this first game," he said. "I'm going to hold myself accountable for not doing my part and going deep in the game. I really could have made some better pitches to counteract some of the miscues. But I didn't do my job."

As demoralizing as the first game must have been for Shields, Giolito got much needed reassurance in his outing. He had a 4-7 record and 7.19 ERA entering Friday's play but steadfastly maintained confidence in his approach throughout his rough patch.

"Absolutely nothing different," Giolito said. "Same competitive mindset going out there, trying to get ahead of hitters and attack hitters in the strike zone. ... Defense behind me was spectacular tonight, especially (Adam Engel) with the diving catch (in the second). Throwing the guy out at third (in the seventh), that was huge."

Moncada's errors in the opener to give him 11 on the season, after he mistimed the hop on one Matt Olson grounder and let a later Olson chopper bounce off his glove. But in Game 2, Moncada was able to cut off Matt Joyce's hard grounder in the sixth.

Renteria was pleased he bounced back.

"He did a nice job of fronting the ball, a very similar ball that he had earlier, and was able to make that play," he said. "They're learning. It's one step. We're glad that he was able to do it."

Avisail Garcia and Leury Garcia, activated from the disabled list for only the day game, showed signs of rust in the twinbill's opener. Avisail struck out twice and had a bat fly out of his hand during one foul tip, and Leury let Khris Davis' fifth-inning single get by him in left field for an error.

WHITE SOX NOTES

Garcias return from DL

By PHIL THOMPSON
Chicago Tribune

One of MLB's weakest hitting lineups got a boost Friday when White Sox outfielders Avisail Garcia and Leury Garcia returned to action after long stints on the disabled list.

Leury singled twice, his 10th multihit game of the season, and Avisail had a hit and two strikeouts during the Sox's 11-2 loss to the Athletics in the first game of a doubleheader at Guaranteed Rate Field. Leury also had an error in left field in the fifth inning.

Avisail had been inactive since April 24 with a right hamstring strain and had a setback with an unspecified knee injury during a workout. Leury was placed on the disabled list a month later with a left knee sprain.

Manager Rick Renteria said both had "gone through pretty good rigors" during rehab stints with Triple-A Charlotte and would face no restrictions on playing time beyond Friday's doubleheader, though neither started in the nightcap, available only on an emergency basis.

Before the first game, Avisail said he was looking forward to staying healthy and returning to his routine.

"My knee is good. My hamstring is good," he said. "I have no pain in my body right now. I feel great, great and focused and trying to compete every single day."

'Clown' comment revisited: After the Indians drubbed the Sox 12-0 Wednesday, Reynaldo Lopez questioned his team's intensity.

"Honestly, we looked like clowns (out) there, starting with me," he said.

Two days later, questions lingered about how Lopez's comments would resonate in the clubhouse, particularly with manager Rick Renteria.

"Good for him," Renteria said before Friday's doubleheader. "I think he was just speaking what everybody was probably sensing. ... I mean, he took accountability for himself (and) that's one of the things we were talking about."

Bad situation: The Sox were mired in a season-high eight-game losing streak and were 26 games below .500 — also a season high — heading into the nightcap of Friday's doubleheader. They're also on pace to be one of three teams to lose 100 or more games, according to fangraphs.com.

CUBS NOTES

Bryant won't gripe about leading off

By PAUL SULLIVAN
Chicago Tribune

CINCINNATI — Kris Bryant gradually is getting accustomed to his role leading off, though he doesn't sound all that thrilled still to be there.

"It's different," Bryant said Friday before going 0-for-4 with three strikeouts in his seventh game leading off.

"The biggest thing is you feel like you're up every inning," he said. "Like you have to be on edge because you're going to get the most at-bats obviously. That's the biggest thing just to get used to — you have to be ready. Other than that it has been pretty fun so far."

Manager Joe Maddon made the move on June 8 in Pittsburgh to try to get Bryant back to his old self, and said he was going to "go one day at a time" with it.

Bryant went 3-for-4 in his first career game leading off but is 6-for-24 in his next 30 at-bats in the one-hole after Friday night's 6-3 loss to the Reds.

Maddon tried something similar with a 6-foot-3, 215-pound switch-hitter Kevin King in 1986, when he managed Double-A Midland in the Angels organization.

"He looked exactly like Don Baylor and he was struggling in the first half, hit .233 with seven homers," Maddon said of King. "Put him in the leadoff spot, he wound up hitting (.301) with 30 homers.

"How does that translate (to Bryant)? That I've done it before with big guys and it actually has worked out well for them."

Bryant doesn't know how long the experiment will last.

"He hasn't told me anything," Bryant said of Maddon. "He sent me a text the first time I did it against the Pirates — 'Hey, you're leading off. I don't want you to change a thing.' But now we just get the lineup text the night before the game, and (it says) that's where you're hitting."

Bryant is not really built for the No. 1 hole, but is playing the good soldier.

"I don't see it like a permanent thing by any means," Bryant said. "It's just a way to kind of shake things up here or there."

Extra innings: Brian Duensing returned from the bereavement list and Justin Hancock was optioned to Triple-A Iowa. Hancock had a 1.50 ERA in nine games, but was a victim of numbers. ... If Tyler Chatwood is available Sunday, Mike Montgomery and Jon Lester will start the first two games against the Dodgers. ... Yu Darvish is expected to be sent on minor-league rehab by Monday.

JAMIE SABAU/GETTY

Kyle Schwarber hits a two-run home run in the fourth inning against the Reds at Great American Ball Park on Friday night.

Cubs fall off kilter

on Saturday, hoping to turn in a better effort than Jose Quintana had Friday night as he allowed four runs on nine hits over five innings.

Was there a letdown after the Dodgers series?

"I don't think so, because we normally like to hit in this ballpark," manager Joe Maddon said. "This is a good hitters' ballpark."

Maddon acknowledged there was a lot of buzz at Wrigley

BLACKHAWKS

Dahlin goes No. 1

Sabres' pick joins Sundin as only top picks from Sweden

Associated Press

Swedish defenseman Rasmus Dahlin went first overall to the Sabres and Russian winger Andrei Svechnikov second to the Hurricanes in the two most predictable developments of an NHL draft that also featured some curveballs.

The Sabres's selection of Dahlin was automatic since they won the draft lottery in April, and the 18-year-old wore a Buffalo Bills hat before being chosen Friday night. Svechnikov got to try on the Hurricanes' draft hat before he was the No. 2 pick, just as general manager Don Waddell acknowledged recently.

Dahlin is the second Swedish player to be taken No. 1, joining Mats Sundin, who went first in the 1989 draft and went on to a Hall of Fame career.

"It's pretty crazy," Dahlin said. "He's a legend in the hockey world. It's kind of weird but amazing."

The selections made after Dahlin and Svechnikov included some surprises. Finnish center Jesperi Kotkaniemi went third to the Canadiens, and the Coyotes went a bit off the board with center Barrett Hayton fifth. That allowed high-scoring Czech winger Filip Zadina to fall to the Red Wings with the sixth pick.

"I wasn't really surprised," said Kotkaniemi, who had been linked to the Canadiens in recent days.

"I heard that they were looking for centers, so I hoped that they chose me."

Red Wings general manager Ken Holland said before the draft that they were going to take the player they thought would be the best down the road. Holland figured Zadina can be a 30-goal scorer in the NHL.

"We're trying to build," Holland said. "We're looking to acquire as much talent as we can as quickly as possible."

Dahlin should spark the rebuilding process for the Sabres, who have missed the playoffs in each of the last seven seasons. The smooth-skating playmaker was the consensus top pick for more than a year.

"It's been a long waiting (period)," Dahlin said. "You can't really plan anything. Finally, I can plan my future."

After Sabres co-owner Kim Pegula made some opening remarks, GM Jason Botterill announced Dahlin as the top pick. In the corner of the arena, Sabres fans in attendance chanted, "Dahlin! Dahlin!"

Bills draft pick Josh Allen tweeted after the pick: "Welcome to Buffalo (at) rasmusdahlin00! Can't wait to watch you play, wings on me later this summer."

"I think Mr. Dahlin could improve pretty much 31 teams in the National Hockey League," Botterill said earlier in the day. "You watch him on the ice and you're very impressed with his hockey sense, his speed, his puck skills."

About an hour before the Sabres were on the clock, the Stanley Cup champion Capitals made the first trade of draft weekend, sending veteran defenseman Brooks Orpik and backup goaltender Philipp Grubauer to the Avalanche for a second-round pick. The trade netted the 47th pick but most importantly cleared significant salary-cap space to attempt to re-sign pending free agents John Carlson and Michal Kempny.

Capitals GM Brian MacLellan has spoken with Carlson's agent about a deal, but they had not agreed to one as of Friday night.

self to (Senators captain) Erik Karlsson, and I think style-wise they play a very similar game. He's a right-hander and Nicolas is a left-hander, so we have two great defensemen of the future."

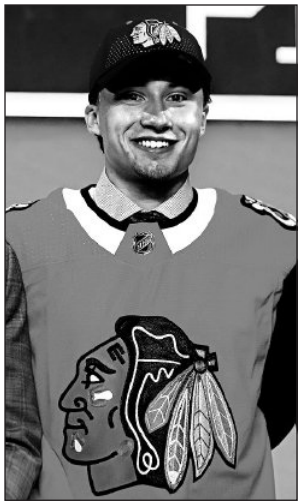

The top few picks of the first round seemed to play out in the Hawks' favor when Czech forward Filip Zadina, who many thought would be taken No. 3, fell to the Red Wings at No. 6. When the Canucks took Michigan defenseman Quinn Hughes with the seventh pick, the Hawks were able to choose among Boqvist, Bouchard, Wahlstrom and defenseman Noah Dobson in what's believed to be a deep draft.

It's rare enough for any draft pick to make the leap directly to the NHL. It's even rarer for a defenseman, and it's likely Boqvist, who won't turn 18 until August, will need two to three seasons before he's ready to join the Hawks.

Boqvist had 14 goals and 10 assists in 25 games with the Brynas J20 team in the SuperElit League. He jumped to the Swedish Hockey League, Sweden's top league, for the final 15 games of the season but had only one assist in that stint.

"I need to improve my defensive play and I need to be bigger and stronger, and of course my offense can better too," the 5-foot-11, 170-pounder said. "Almost everything."

The Hawks have put a huge emphasis on defense over the last two drafts. They selected Henri Jokiharju and Ian Mitchell at Nicolas Beaudin poses after being selected 27th overall by the Blackhawks.

Nos. 29 and No. 57, respectively, with their first two picks in 2017 and, like Boqvist, they are right-handed shots. Jokiharju is planning to attend the Blackhawks prospects camp next month and could play his way onto the roster.

"We're trying to find the best players, whether they're right-handers or left-handers," Bowman said. "Righties are hard to come by, so the fact that we have a few of them now is a great sign."

The Blackhawks also held the No. 27 pick, acquired from the Predators in the Ryan Hartman trade last season, and chose Beaudin. Like Boqvist, Beaudin is offensive-minded.

"He really came on strong this year, I thought especially the second half," Bowman said. "Had a chance to see him play in the playoffs, and I was impressed with his game."

He has a lot of poise, he has a lot of smarts. He can do it all."

Beaudin had 12 goals and 57 assists in 68 games for Drummondville of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League.

"I'm a two-way defenseman," Beaudin said. "I can provide offense too. I have a great (hockey) IQ, and I think in my zone I'm just getting better and better."

The Hawks have had luck finding Swedish players in the draft before. Hjalmarsson, who was an integral part of three Stanley Cup champions, was a fourth-round pick in 2005, while forward Marcus Kruger was a fifth-rounder in the 2009 draft and won two Cups with the Hawks.

Boqvist is entering the NHL at the same time as No. 1 overall pick Rasmus Dahlin, another Swedish defenseman who went to the Sabres and whom many consider to be a future Norris Trophy winner. Asked if their games were similar, Boqvist wanted no part of it.

"I think he's pretty much better than I am right now," Boqvist said.

The Hawks don't have a second-round pick but have two third-rounders among the six picks they're scheduled to make Saturday.

Carcillo, Boynton suing NHL

2 ex-Hawks claim league hid data on concussions

By JOE KNOWLES
Chicago Tribune

Former Blackhawks Daniel Carcillo and Nick Boynton are suing the NHL for withholding information about concussion-related brain injuries.

The suit, filed Friday by attorneys Thomas A. Demetrio and William T. Gibbs, claims the players were never warned about the risk of brain damage caused by repeated hits to the head. According to the complaint, the league "allowed and encouraged" the players to return to the ice after incurring concussions.

"The NHL is long overdue in acknowledging the significant risks inherent in their style of game," Gibbs said in a press release.

The law firm also represents the estate of Steve Montador, the former Blackhawk who died in February 2015 at 35. Montador's autopsy revealed he had chronic traumatic encephalopathy. The same firm sued the NHL on Montador's behalf in December 2015.

Montador and Carcillo were teammates with the Hawks.

"I'm doing this on behalf of all former NHL players that are struggling with the difficulties of transitioning from a life in the NHL with brains that have been damaged," Carcillo said in the release. "Players today are still being denied proper care for concussions. It's time for the NHL to finally acknowledge that serious, permanent damage can be done if head trauma is ignored or neglected."

Carcillo played nine seasons in the NHL, three with the Hawks, including the 2013 and 2015 Stanley Cup champions. Nicknamed "Car Bomb," he was mainly known as an enforcer and twice led the NHL in penalty minutes.

Boynton played 11 seasons in the league and appeared in 605 regular-season games, 48 with the Hawks, and was a member of the 2010 Cup winners.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23 NORMAL HIGH: 82° NORMAL LOW: 61° RECORD HIGH: 97° (1930) RECORD LOW: 44° (1982)

Waterlogged city welcomes dry weekend, sun

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH

76

63

■ Weather conditions improve as heavy rain-producing storm system heads east.

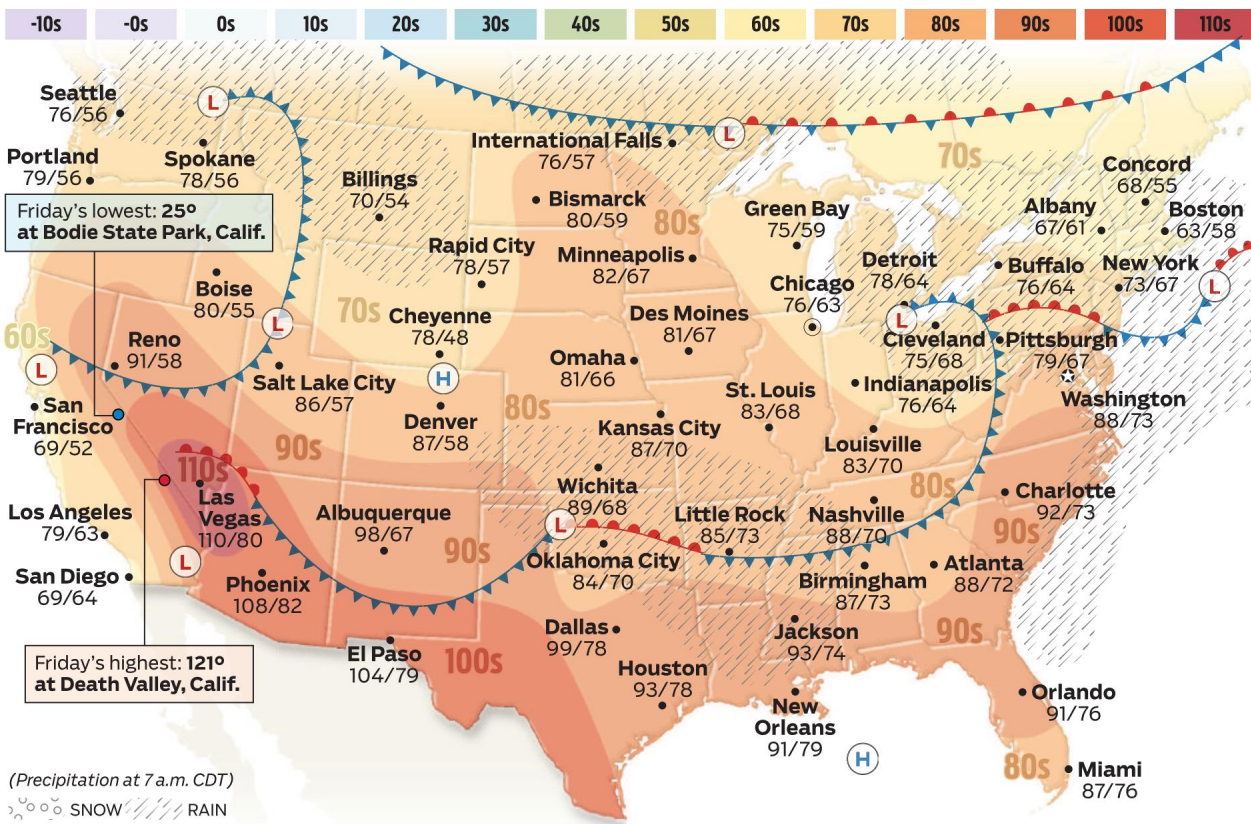

■ Lingering low clouds, patchy drizzle early, then clouds decrease. Temps hover in the low-mid 60s at daybreak.

■ Skies turn partly sunny by late morning, while light winds become NW-N around 10 mph.

■ Emergent sunshine boosts temps closer to normal. Afternoon readings peak near 80 degrees W-S of the city, to low 70s downtown.

■ Fair skies overnight. Seasonable, with lows generally in the mid 60s.

NATIONAL FORECAST

Rainfall following the area's latest deluge totaled over 4 inches across parts of the metro area, with amounts in excess of 3 inches common. This has left most rivers across northern Illinois in flood, including the Fox, Des Plaines, Du Page and Illinois rivers.

At a time of the year when sunshine is most intense, low overcast, rain and northeast winds held temperatures at early May levels, with daytime highs averaging 65 degrees Thursday and Friday. Satellite and radar imagery late Friday showed the low pressure system responsible for our soggy weather moving northeast across Indiana. Although spotty light showers may occur early Saturday, an improving trend will take place. Emerging sunshine is expected to bring more summerlike conditions by Sunday.

SUNDAY, JUNE 24

85

65

Ample sun and light winds make for a pleasant, seasonably warm day. Afternoon temps peak in the low-mid 80s, but readings dip to the low 70s lakeside as winds turn NE at 10-15 mph.

MONDAY, JUNE 25

75

Morning showers/t-storms possible, then partly cloudy, breezy, hot and humid. Temps soar to the mid 90s, with the heat index reaching triple digits. SW winds 15-25 mph.

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,
What is the largest summertime temperature spread between a day's high and low temperatures?
— Margaret Robertson, Chicago

Dear Margaret,
During the months of June, July and August (meteorological summer), the largest temperature spread between a day's high and low temperatures was 44 degrees on June 16, 1950, with a high of 92 and low of 48. On July 7, 1980, the day's high/low readings were 102 and 59 degrees, giving a spread of 43 degrees.

During astronomical summer, June 21 through Sept. 22, the greatest temperature ranges were on July 7, 1980 (mentioned previously), and 40 degrees on June 22, 1875, with 80 and 40 degrees.

All those temperatures were obtained from Chicago's official temperature database, which began on Nov. 1, 1870.

U.S. OPEN

Where bad overshadows good

Open’s quirks often leave achievements underappreciated

By DOUG FERGUSON
Associated Press

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. — If the aim of the U.S. Open is to identify the best player, the last three got it right. The problem is a tendency to remember what went wrong. The lasting image from Shinnecock Hills last weekend was Phil Mickelson, now 0-for-27 in the U.S. Open, hitting his putt too hard on the 13th hole Saturday. He moved as swiftly as his 48-year-old legs would allow and swatted the ball back toward the hole while it was still rolling. It was a shocking scene to everyone but Mickelson, who said he meant no disrespect to the game by intentionally violating a rule to either save shots or save a long walk to wherever his ball might have stopped. Mickelson, however, did apologize four days later.

Brooks Koepka, meanwhile, delivered a classic Open performance with discipline, grit and clutch putting. He won by getting up and down three times in a four-hole stretch, one of them for bogey, the last one a par on the 14th hole when he first had to get his ball back in play from thick, shin-high grass.

He became the first repeat U.S. Open champion in 29 years, and it’s a wonder anyone remembers he won last year.

Just the mention of Erin Hills brings back memories of wide fairways and record scoring.

There was Koepka posing with the trophy, the large leaderboard behind him filled with more red numbers than had ever been seen at a U.S. Open. He was the third player to win at double digits under par, finishing at 16 under. The other two were Tiger Woods, who won by 15 shots at Pebble Beach, and Rory McIlroy, who won by eight at Congressional. Koepka won by four shots, one of seven players to finish at 10 under or better.

The ultimate test was finding enough red numbers to put on all the boards.

“Everyone said Erin Hills was set up for me,” Koepka said. “It was set up for a lot of guys that bomb that ball. I just happened to play a little bit better.”

No one was better on the back nine when he ran off three straight birdies, and the middle one was exquisite — a chip 8-iron from 155 yards to a back pin. Koepka called it the best shot he

Remember that one? Probably not, and that’s OK. It’s easy to lose track of birdies on a course that allowed a record 140 rounds under par.

Dustin Johnson spent more time talking to rules officials than to Lee Westwood, his playing partner, during the final round at Oakmont in 2016. There was a discussion on the fifth green about whether Johnson caused his ball to move a fraction of an inch. Equally vivid was the image of two officials telling Johnson on the 12th tee he might be penalized one shot. Or he might not.

Overlooked is that tough par save from behind the 16th green and Johnson hitting 6-iron to 5 feet on the 18th hole for a birdie to make the penalty a moot point.

The sign that a U.S. Open is not running smoothly is when Mike Davis, the chief executive of the USGA, is on TV as much as some of the players. The ideal week is when Davis is out of sight until the trophy presentation.

But he had some explaining to do, such as how the wind was stronger than expected Saturday to the point that he felt good shots were not rewarded — and in some cases punished. He also explained why the rules did not provide for Mickelson to be disqualified.

The severity of Shinnecock in the third round should not take away from this U.S. Open. It’s supposed to be hard. It has a history of being the toughest test, and living on the edge often means crossing the line. Everyone still plays the same course, and Koepka shot 72 that day. That’s why he was in position to win.

If not for Mickelson making a spectacle of himself and the moment, odds are it would be forgotten sooner.

Tom Meeks, the predecessor to Davis in setting up the U.S. Open, used to relish such moments. He said in a 2009 interview that the U.S. Open had to be harder than anything else but still fair, and that was a hard line to find. “If I had any doubt, I would go the more difficult way,” Meeks said.

He also predicted that Davis, if he were to follow the U.S. Open philosophy, would make mistakes at some point.

“It doesn’t happen by design,” Meeks said. “It happens because of the U.S. Open.”

The USGA doesn’t always get it wrong. Its finest moment was Pinehurst No. 2 in 2014, when the Open delivered a proper test for the men and women in consecutive weeks. The first year two years Davis was in charge, the winning score at Winged Foot and Oakmont was 5 over par, and no one complained.

Lately, however, the U.S. Open has become more about the USGA than the player who gets the trophy. That doesn’t happen at the other majors. With few exceptions, it’s about the winner, not the golf course. It’s about the player, not the organization.

And so the memories of Shinnecock are as much about Mickelson as Koepka, and memories of Erin Hills are as much about low scores as the guy who had the lowest one.

Fans can choose what they want to remember.

But it would be nice to have a U.S. Open when there wasn’t such a choice.

GOLF NOTES

Who was Willie Anderson? Soon enough, Koepka will find out

By DOUG FERGUSON
Associated Press

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. — Curtis Strange has some advice for Brooks Koepka ahead of next year’s U.S. Open: Study up on Willie Anderson.

Koepka’s one-shot victory at Shinnecock Hills made him the first back-to-back U.S. Open champion in 29 years, dating to Strange winning his second in a row in 1989. Strange was the first player in 38 years to win consecutive Opens since Ben Hogan in 1951.

“Nobody wrote about it,” Strange said about his title defense going into Oak Hill. “I didn’t think about repeating. I never went to a tournament thinking I was going to win. I went to a tournament thinking I was going to play well. When you’re not Tiger Woods caliber, it’s presumptuous to stand on the first tee thinking about winning.”

But when he arrived at Medinah in 1990 with a shot at three in a row, Strange couldn’t escape the attention.

“I wasn’t confident or cocky or arrogant, but I believed I might have a chance,” Strange said. “You can’t help but think it because you’re asked about it all the time. I can tell you this: Brooks is going to learn a whole lot more about Willie Anderson than he knows now.”

Anderson, who was born in North Berwick, Scotland, and immigrated to the U.S. when he was 16, is the only player to win the U.S. Open three times — in 1903 at Baltusrol, in 1904 at Glen View Club near Chicago and in 1905 at Myopia Hunt.

“I knew he won the U.S. Open,” Strange said. “I quickly found out the rest.”

Strange was still buzzing after arriving home in North Carolina over the chance to witness the end of his greatest distinction in golf. He is part of the Fox Sports broadcast, providing analysis while walking the course. Strange typically was with the last group, but when Tony Finau and Daniel Berger dropped back early, he wound up with Koepka and Dustin Johnson.

Strange and Koepka not only shared a brief hug as Koepka walked off the 18th green, Strange then had to interview him before the crowd.

“I thought about asking him how well he knows his golf history,” Strange said with a laugh.

Instead, he asked Koepka about going back to back, “Do you know how special this is?”

“It was a little emotional for me,” Strange said. “It was the thrill of my life.”

In front: Johnson returned to No. 1 in the world two weeks ago, and he returned to the top of the FedEx Cup standings last week.

It has not been a bad year.

And it could have been even better if Johnson had a stronger record closing out tournaments.

The U.S. Open was the fifth time Johnson had at least a share of the 54-hole lead. He won two of those events, the Sentry Tournament of Champions and the FedEx St. Jude Classic.

Johnson tied a PGA Tour record by losing a six-shot lead at the HSBC Champions. He was outplayed by Ted Potter Jr. in the final round of the AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am and by Koepka in the final round at Shinnecock Hills.

Johnson now has a 9-8 record when he has at least a share of the 54-hole lead, including an 0-3 mark in the U.S. Open. He lost a three-shot lead at Pebble Beach in 2010 and was tied for the lead at Chambers Bay in 2015 and at Shinnecock. He was the first player since Phil Mickelson at Merion in 2013 to have at least a share of the lead after each of the first three rounds without winning.

Johnson’s 9-8 record is a little misleading because three of those victories were at tournaments shortened to 54 holes — Pebble Beach in 2009 (rain), the Barclays in 2011 (hurricane) and Kapalua in 2013 (wind).

Stricker’s streak: Steve Stricker was No. 5 in the world, one spot behind Kenny Perry and with no real chance of catching Tiger Woods. Apple’s latest mobile device was the iPhone 3GS. LeBron James was with the Cavaliers — the first time around.

That was the last time Stricker missed the cut in a major.

“I don’t know if it’s a streak,” he said after making the cut on the number at the U.S. Open. “It’s just that I want to keep playing. It’s nice to be making cuts, but it’s about more than that.”

The last cut he missed was at Hazeltine in the 2009 PGA Championship. Now the streak is at 25 majors, though Stricker has not played in or did not qualify for nine of those.

Stricker would like to be at the British Open, but he’ll have to win the John Deere Classic for a fourth time to get there. That would allow him to play the Senior British Open at St. Andrews, and it’s possible Stricker will go over to St. Andrews specifically for the senior major.

“I’m thinking about going over there, just because it is at St. Andrews,” he said. “I do like St. Andrews — the aura, the town, the tournament.”

The deciding factor, as usual, will be what his family wants.

Divots: Koepka moved to the top of the Ryder Cup standings after the first two majors, followed by Johnson and Patrick Reed. ... Mickelson has dropped out of the automatic top eight qualifiers and is No. 10. With majors counting double, Mickelson tied for 36th at the Masters and tied for 48th in the U.S. Open. ... Stricker has earned $806,235 in five starts on the PGA Tour Champions and is No. 4 in the Charles Schwab Cup. He has made $549,838 in eight starts on the PGA Tour and is No. 130 in the FedEx Cup. ... Koepka joined Rory McIlroy, Padraig Harrington, Mickelson and Woods as the only players to win majors in consecutive seasons in the last 25 years.

Stat of the week: Johnson took 53 putts in the opening two rounds at the U.S. Open. He took 73 putts on the weekend.

Final word: “He can do my job, but I can’t do his.” — Graeme McDowell, who missed the cut at the Open, on Matt Parziale, the firefighter from Massachusetts who tied as the low amateur at Shinnecock Hills.

AL SEIB/LOS ANGELES TIMES

Koko Kederian, left, son Joah and the staff of Champion Cleaners in Pasadena, Calif., take a break to watch some of a World Cup match that was being televised Tuesday morning.

Everyone comes together

Dry cleaner unites customers with TV airing World Cup

BY BILL PLASCHKE
Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. — Amid the dark roar of a dry-cleaning machine and the steamy swoosh of presses appears a different sort of sound.

It's the noise not of suffocating labor, but of sport, passion and light.

It's coming from a 42-inch television set sitting atop a cabinet above a hanging USC band uniform and a sewing machine. It's flowing out the narrow front door and into a busy Pasadena street, drawing smiling customers into its odd but uplifting presence.

It's a dry-cleaning shop showing a soccer game.

"Are you just dropping off, or are you also picking up?"

Salah got away ... to put the shot wide!

Every four years, for the last 40 years, the staff at Champion Cleaners has celebrated the World Cup by touching their neighbors' hearts while they press their shirts. In a tradition started by original owner Koko Kederian, every World Cup game during working hours is shown on a TV hauled from the home of his son, co-owner Joah Kederian.

"Look straight ahead while I check that hem."

Gueye, stutter step, shot, and it goes in!

Their diverse nine-person staff, which speaks eight languages, runs from work stations to the TV to celebrate every goal by every team. The customers, an equally diverse group that averages about 300 visits a day, pause to watch, cheer and brag about their favorite countries while they dump off their laundry or pick up their suits.

There's washing, clapping, pressing, booing, tailoring, taunting and plastic-wrapped clothes that are left hanging on racks by customers who are so involved in the action they walk away without taking home their shirts.

It's odd, clamorous and beautiful.

"It's America!" said Koko, 68, a former soccer star from Lebanon. "The World Cup is one chance to show America exactly who we are. We are everybody from everywhere."

The elder Kederian uses the monthlong party to put the shine on the melting pot of his life.

Since arriving here from his war-torn country in 1975 with one dollar in his pocket, Kederian's love for the American dream has become such that he cleans American flags for free and gives deep discounts to the Pasadena Police Department and anyone with a military uniform. Yet he also appreciates the tug of one's roots and celebrates the World Cup's ability to allow everyone, if only for a month, to return to their spiritual home.

"You come in here, you can be who you are," he said. "The World Cup is a gift."

Melissa Meister, a customer at Champion Cleaners and fan of Germany's World Cup team, calls soccer "the anti-Trump sport."

As Champion Cleaners owner Koko Kederian sneaks a peek at the World Cup on TV, son Joah and customer Maria Quispe discuss soccer. Quispe, an interior designer whose parents came from Mexico, says the Kederians "are really great representatives of the community."

"The World Cup is one chance to show America exactly who we are. We are everybody from everywhere. You come in here, you can be who you are."

— Champion Cleaners owner Koko Kederian, whose business always has a TV tuned to the World Cup

Spend a few minutes in Champion Cleaners and understand why the absence of a U.S. team in the World Cup has done little to dampen interest here. The ratings are stronger than ever, the buzz as powerful as ever.

The scene is being repeated throughout Los Angeles, sports being celebrated in places whose business is not sports, televisions set up everywhere from taco shops to Chinese restaurants to even the cluttered counter at gas stations. Some folks are talking about Ronaldo, others about Harry Kane, and one never knows when an entire city block will break out in a chorus of "Cielito Lindo."

There might not be an American team involved, but as Kederian says, there is very much an America involved, and Champion Cleaners is buzzing.

"I don't bring that television in here for anything else," Joah said. "Nothing in sports means so much to so many different people."

On this Tuesday morning, here comes a man with an armload of pants professing love for his grandparents' England.

"This event bonds us in so many ways," George Strong said. "When that TV is on, I really spend more time in here than I should."

There appears a woman with a pile of clothes who is rooting for her parents' Mexico. She is far from alone, El Tri being the clear rooting favorite of Angelenos still celebrating Mexico's stunning opening defeat of defending champion Germany.

"It's the only time the world comes together, and it happens right here," said Maria Quispe, who shouts "Mexico" as she turns from the TV to walk out the door.

Now here comes a woman who, after picking up her freshly starched clothes, notes that she is cheering for both her mother's Germany and the symbolism this event holds.

"Soccer is the anti-Trump sport," Melissa Meister said. "In this event, we all matter, no matter where we're from. The U.S. might not be here, but we all have a second team."

One customer who sticks around to watch the end of Russia's 3-1 victory over Egypt acknowledged his cheering is not tied to his background.

"It's all about Iceland," Justin Christman said. "Doesn't everyone love Iceland?"

Koko is cheering for Iceland. Of course he's cheering for Iceland.

"My dad is an underdog," said Joah, a former college soccer player who gave up the sport to run Champion's daily operations. "Our store is all about underdogs."

When Koko arrived in America, he was forced to give up a promising soccer career that had included a stint on the Lebanon national team. He was broke and had to find a job.

He began as a shoe designer but saw promise in the dry-cleaning business, even though he had never washed a towel or folded a shirt. He borrowed the money to buy Champion, learned the business, and today his store has become the equivalent of a friendly corner bar, one that has about 5,000 total customers.

"They know everybody by name and everybody knows them," said Quispe, an interior designer.

"They are really great representatives of the community."

Koko has rewarded the community by hiring workers from all corners, from Armenia to South Korea to Russia. Several have worked here more than 15 years, leading to World Cup rooting in many voices.

"There's cheering for a lot of different teams in here," Joah said. "I guess you could say we're all cheering for the world."

ULTRALUX REVIEW

212-mph, $331K
‘18 McLaren 720S
rewrites the book
on supercar style

By Mark Phelan, Detroit Free Press

McLaren has rewritten the book on supercars. In big, clear, easy-to-read print. Stunningly fast and breathtakingly styled, the new McLaren 720S is an exotic car without drawbacks, unless you consider it a drawback that the cost can blow past $300,000 faster than the 720S gets to 60 mph.

Perhaps most amazing, the 720-horsepower mid-engine two-seater is so comfortable and easy to use you could drive it every day. My $327,255 Quartz-colored tester even had a luggage compartment under the hood that held three or four grocery bags.

Behind the Wheel

I didn’t take the 720S grocery shopping because it would take too long. Not getting to and from the store. That could’ve been the next quickest thing to teleportation, if I didn’t care about keeping my driver’s license. The 720S consumes time like it does gasoline at wide-open throttle because every stop includes people asking to take their picture with it.

This must be similar to why Beyonce doesn’t do her own grocery shopping.

Handcrafted by McLaren in England, the 720S combines the cutting-edge technology of the company’s famous Formula 1 race cars with the luxurious interior look and feel of prestige brands that have been around for a century.

Parked, it looks like a jet fighter on a carrier deck. In motion, it’s a blur, accelerating to 60 mph in 2.8 seconds, covering the quarter-mile in 10.3, and reaching a nearly unimaginable 186 mph in 21.4. Terminal velocity is 212 mph.

I drove one of 400 Launch Edition 720S cars that were built. McLaren builds each to customer order at its factory in Woking, England, not far from the heart of Formula One racing and engineering. The factory produces two other road cars, the 570S and Senna. Total production of the three should reach about 5,000 this year. McLaren sold 3,340 cars in 2017, including 1,221 720Ses.

The performance figures make the 720S sound daunting, a car for race drivers, dangerous in the hands of an amateur, but it’s supremely well-behaved. The driver must keep an eye on the speedometer because the car’s power and smoothness make it alarmingly easy to approach triple-digit speeds, but the steering is precise without being touchy, the ride comfortable.

Big carbon-ceramic brakes require extra effort at first, but once you’ve driven enough to heat them, stopping power is monumental.

The weight distribution is 42 percent front-58 percent rear, in keeping with the supercar tradition of putting more than half over the rear wheels to keep them from spinning when you floor it.

The 720S structure is a racing-style a carbon-fiber tub, the same light, strong material used in advanced race cars and aircraft. The body is a mix of aluminum and carbon fiber. The proportions of each are nearly entirely up to the driver. One of the leading ordering strategies is replacing aluminum panels and pieces with carbon fiber to make your car even lighter, faster and, of course, more expensive.

The base price for my car was $284,745. Options included $4,840 for visible carbon fiber in places like the A-pillars, and a $2,510 hydraulic lift to raise the nose so the low aerodynamic air splitter doesn’t scrape the ground pulling into driveways and parking lots. Another $2,690 gets you little Gorilla Glass windows — yep, like your iPhone

Assembled: Woking, Surrey, England

Key features: Carbon ceramic brakes; antilock brakes; stability control; launch control; touch screen; navigation; Bluetooth; USB port; hydraulic suspension; speed-deployed rear spoiler; dual-zone climate control; Sirius satellite radio; folding gauge cluster for improved visibility; alarm; Pirelli P Zero Corsa tires;; LED headlamps and front/rear running lights;

Options: Five twin-spoke lightweight forged wheels; liquid titanium metal finish; red brake calipers; Homelink; vehicle lift; 360 degree park assist; luggage strap; warning triangle; first aid kit; fire extinguisher; car cover; visible carbon fiber body structure; luxury package; leather steering wheel; electric steering column; Quartz paint; Gorilla glass exterior door upper; 12-speaker Bowers & Wilkins audio; launch Edition luggage — where the dihedral doors open into the roof.

The doors’ wide opening makes the 720S extraordinarily easy to enter and exit, by supercar standards. Hinged at the front fender and the roof, the door opening is very wide. You can step into the car from above, unlike the limbo-like moves many super-low exotic cars require. The inside is surprisingly roomy. My car had the full luxury package of options, which included black and purple leather — complementary to the exterior Quartz-colored paint — on the seats, doors, dash and steering wheel.

The controls are simple and easy to use, as you’d hope in a car created to be driven fast and for fun. Four simple stalks manage cruise control, trip computer, display and nose height. Three switches offer gears: drive, neutral and reverse. There is no “park,” because the electric parking brake automatically engages when you stop the engine. Paddle shifters are mounted on the steering for manual gear changes, but honestly, you’re kidding yourself if you think you can do it faster or better than McLaren’s seven-speed dual-clutch automatic.

Nestled a few inches behind the occupants’ heads, the 4.0-liter engine is surprisingly unobtrusive, allowing conversations and hands-free phone calls. A small touch screen low in the center stack provides simple controls for navigation, phone and audio. There’s no voice recognition. That’s the only thing I’d change about the car. You can receive hands-free phone calls easily, but making one requires some distraction, selecting numbers or a name from the touchscreen.

The 720S intentionally eschews driver assistance features like blind spot alert, automatic emergency braking and lane departure alert. That’s understandable. While you could drive the 720S every day, nobody will, and the cars’ owners are likely to have other vehicles loaded with safety and connectivity.

The McLaren 720S demands your attention, and deserves it.
