Trump reiterates call for talks amid threats of force

By ROBERT BURNS AND LOLITA C. BALDOR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump on Friday blamed Iran for attacks on oil tankers near the strategic Strait of Hormuz, but he also held out hope that implicit U.S. threats to use force will yield talks with the Islamic Republic as the Pentagon considers beefing up defenses in the Persian Gulf area.

A day after explosions blew holes in two oil tankers just outside Iran’s territorial waters, rattling international oil markets, the administration seemed caught between pressure to punish Iran and reassure Washington’s Gulf Arab allies without drawing the U.S. closer to war.

“Iran did it,” Trump said on Fox News Channel’s “Fox & Friends.” He didn’t offer evidence, but the U.S. military released video it said showed Iran’s Revolutionary Guard removing an unexploded mine from one of the oil tankers targeted near the Strait of Hormuz, suggesting Tehran wanted to cover its tracks.

The black-and-white U.S. video of the Iranians alongside the Japanese-owned tanker Kokuka Courageous came after the crew abandoned ship because they saw the undetonated explosive on its hull, said Capt.

New rules and a $1.7M grand prize

McHenry VFW’s Queen of Hearts raffle resumes; drawing Tuesday

By ROBERT MCCOPPIN
Chicago Tribune

A Queen of Hearts raffle, which brought million-dollar mania to the McHenry Veterans of Foreign Wars post last year with mobs of players and long lines of traffic, has returned with a $1.7 million grand prize and changes to rein in the runaway growth of the game. Tickets are on sale for Tuesday’s drawing, with new rules to make the game more manageable and save organizers stress, post Cmdr.

Dwane Lungren said. Foremost among them is that the post now will take half of the total jackpot — now at $3.4 million — rather than 40% as before.

In addition, there is now a $3 million cap on the top prize, and a July 30 deadline to end the game, as required by new city ordinances.

The new limits didn’t bother disc jockey Tommy Hanus of Wonder Lake, who bought $20 worth of tickets Thursday. Hanus, who makes a living playing weddings, parties and veterans events, was glad to have the game back.

“I’m ready to play,” he said. “I’m not a rich man, but I’m trying to be.”

City officials wanted to limit the size of the game to reduce the crowds and traffic jams that swarmed the post last September, when Lori Skoniecke, a park district employee in Schaumburg, won $4 million for drawing the winning card.

The game consists of a deck of cards randomly hidden in numbered envelopes.

$5K rooftop loan cited in Cochran fraud case

As sentencing nears, prosecutors say then-official climbed atop motel in 2012

By JASON MEISNER
Chicago Tribune

Chicago Ald. Willie Cochran was in difficult financial straits in February 2012 when he made a peculiar pitch for cash on the roof of an abandoned motel in his South Side ward, federal prosecutors say.

That January, the longtime 20th Ward alderman had bounced a $6,600 personal check for his daughter’s tuition at Eastern Illinois University, and the ward charity fund he often used to cover personal expenses was drained of all but $7.21, according to prosecutors. Two recent gambling trips to Indiana casinos hadn’t paid off.

Out of options, Cochran climbed onto the roof of the vacant motel at 66th Street and King Drive, where the Rev. Corey Brooks was living in a tent across from his New Beginnings Church as a publicity stunt to raise money for a new community center, prosecutors alleged.

Cochran asked Brooks — identified by prosecutors only as Pastor A — for a loan to cover his daughter’s tuition, they alleged. Brooks complied, arranging “by phone from the roof of the motel” for his New Beginnings Church to issue a $5,000 cashier’s check to Cochran.

In a court filing made public late Thursday, prosecutors revealed the strange rooftop loan for the first time while seeking up to 1 1/2 years in prison for Cochran at his sentencing next week for wire fraud.

At the time he asked for the loan, Cochran was also pressuring business owners — including a pediatric medical center for children on public aid — to donate to the charity that was supposed to fund activities for needy children and provide assistance to others in his

‘Baby Yovanny is in heaven with his mother’

Yovanny Jadiel Lopez lived for seven weeks after he was cut from the womb of his mother, who had been lured to a Southwest Side home and strangled.

In all that time, he remained on life support. But the little boy seemed able to breathe on his own at times and, to some, even reacted to his father, Yovani Lopez, according to the family’s attorney, Frank Avila. But late Thursday, Lopez and other relatives were told to rush to Advocate Christ Medical Center in Oak Lawn. Just after 5 a.m. Friday, Yovanny was pronounced dead.

“Today is not a good day for him,” Avila said of the infant’s father. “It’s a day of sorrow, it’s a day of suffering. But he is very happy in a sense that the baby’s suffering has ended and that the baby — his baby, baby Yovanny, is in heaven with his mother, Marlen, and the suffering has ended — there is no more pain.”

The Cook County medical examiner’s office had not yet determined how the baby died, but the family has said doctors told them Yovanny suffered severe brain damage from a lack of oxygen. Earlier in the week, a family spokesperson, Julie Contreras, told reporters the boy “suffered irrevocable brain damage. There’s no medicine, no pill that can fix that. Only a miracle.”

During the boy’s last hours, religious leaders and some family members surrounded his hospital bed. “Even as of last

Police: Gang rivalry may have sparked shooting

BY JEREMY GORNER AND MORGAN GREENE
Chicago Tribune

Chicago police are investigating whether gang rivalry sparked a shooting that wounded a 2-year-old boy, a woman and a man in an alley Thursday night in the Albany Park neighborhood on the Northwest Side.

The three were sitting in a silver Jeep when a white, newer-model Hyundai with tinted windows drove up in the 4900 block of North Kedzie Avenue and someone inside fired as many as eight shots around 9 p.m., according to police. The woman drove to Swedish Covenant Hospital, where she and the boy were transferred to other hospitals.

The boy suffered a gunshot wound to the elbow and was reported in serious condition at Lurie Children's Hospital, police said.

The woman, 29, suffered several gunshot wounds to the back and was taken to Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center in serious condition. The man, 25, stayed at Swedish Covenant, where he was reported in serious condition with wounds to his legs.

Police said the man is a reputed member of the Gangster Disciples street gang in Uptown and believes he was targeted by the rival Conservative Vice Lords.

A family headed home from a high school graduation celebration said they were waiting for the light to change near Kedzie and Ainslie Street when they heard the gunfire. The family watched as a man walking his dog near the alley behind the school started to run and duck. The family said they saw someone drive up to the alley, heard close to 10 shots and then saw the vehicle speed away.

"It happened really fast," said a man who declined to give his name. "It's a playground there."

The Albany Park patrol district is one of the safest in the city, according to police statistics. Through Sunday, there had been 12 shootings in the district compared with 18 at the same time last year, the data shows. There were four homicides in the district through Sunday, one more than last year.

poverty-stricken ward, prosecutors said. Cochran also extorted campaign cash from others who needed his help at City Hall in order to "line his own pockets," prosecutors said.

Cochran, a former Chicago police officer, used the money for himself despite taking home more than $137,000 a year after taxes between his aldermanic salary and his police pension, prosecutors said.

"Whatever (Cochran's) motivation — greed, his daughter's tuition, a gambling habit — he misused and abused his position as an elected official for his personal gain," Assistant U.S. Attorneys Heather McShain and Christopher Stetler wrote in the 25-page filing.

Cochran, 66, pleaded guilty in March to a single count of wire fraud stemming from his misuse of the charity funds, marking Chicago's 30th alderman since 1972 to be convicted of crimes related to official duties. Several other former aldermen, including Edward "Fast Eddie" Vrdolyak and Democratic stalwart William Beavers, were convicted of crimes after leaving the City Council.

After his guilty plea was entered, Cochran inadvertently copied court officials on an email to his lawyer in which he "disavowed" the amount of the fraud and seemed to suggest he wasn't really guilty of the charge he admitted to in court, prosecutors said. If Cochran takes a similar stance at his sentencing hearing, prosecutors said they would ask for an additional six months in prison — or a total of two years in prison.

In a court filing last week, Cochran's attorneys said the former alderman is "old and not as adept at emails as younger generations may be" and was in no way reneging on his plea deal. Still, his attorneys sought a sentence of home confinement, arguing that putting convicted aldermen behind bars has so far done little to curb corruption in the City Council ranks — so why keep doing it?

"Since sending the previous aldermen to jail has not done anything to curb Chicago's tidal wave of aldermanic corruption cases, there is no reason to think that sending Mr. Cochran to jail will," wrote Cochran's lawyer, Christopher Grohman.

Exhibit A, according to Grohman, is the still-unfolding corruption probe that has ensnared longtime Ald. Edward Burke and ex-Ald. Daniel Solis.

In their response, prosecutors called the decidedly Chicago-style argument "irrational and worthy of derision."

"Murders also continue to occur in this district despite severe penalties for that crime," prosecutors wrote. "According to the bizarre reasoning embraced by the defendant, the killer ought to walk free because murder continues unabated in this city."

If lighter sentences have failed to deter aldermen from committing crimes, prosecutors wrote, the logical conclusion to be drawn is that "much stiffer sentences should be imposed."

Elected to the City Council in 2007, Cochran was indicted in December 2016 on an array of charges, including extortion and bribery. An FBI affidavit made public in 2017 said Cochran at one point demanded $5,000 from a liquor store owner, writing in a text message, "I need your help, whatever you can do."

But those allegations were dropped from Cochran's 17-page plea agreement. Instead he admitted only to looting his ward's charitable fund that was supposed to be used to host events "including a summer back-to-school picnic, a Valentine's Day event for senior citizens, and events during the holiday season each November and December."

Cochran admitted using the fund to pay for personal expenses, including college tuition for his daughter, cash withdrawals from casino ATMs and the purchase of "items for his personal residence," according to the plea agreement. Though he had personally donated about $32,000 to the fund, the amount he spent on himself exceeded his contributions by at least $14,285, according to the plea deal.

In their sentencing filing, prosecutors detailed some of the items bought by Cochran with the charity's debit card, including meals at fancy downtown restaurants, a fog lamp chrome bumper for his Mercedes, lamps, vases and other items from Z Gallerie, as well as a "compact juice fountain" and herb scissors from Crate and Barrel.

He also purchased compact discs at Best Buy, including Rihanna's "Good Girl Gone Bad Reloaded" and another titled "Call Me Irresponsible," prosecutors said. Many of the items were found during a search of Cochran's home after he was charged.

In his sentencing filing, Grohman argued that while Cochran acknowledged stealing from the charity fund, his crime did not amount to public corruption.

Cochran had lived a law-abiding life dedicated to public service until things started going off the rails in 2011 when his wife developed serious health issues and lost her nursing job, Grohman said. Her rising medical bills, coupled with the loss of income, put a significant financial strain on the family, he said.

"Due to the stress on the family, Mr. Cochran succumbed to his gambling addiction, convinced that he could gamble his way out of his monetary problems," Grohman wrote. "Of course, he lost, and when the money was gone, his problems were not only still there, but seriously compounded."

Prosecutors said over a four-year period beginning in 2010, Cochran withdrew a total of $25,000 from the ward charity fund at ATMs located either in or near Indiana casinos. That included a withdrawal in January 2012 from the Ameristar Casino in East Chicago that brought the charity's balance to near zero.

Soon after, Cochran visited Rev. Brooks on the motel rooftop. Brooks told the FBI he "assumed" at the time that Cochran would pay back the interest-free loan because "an alderman won't stiff you."

But that proved easier said than done. Brooks told the FBI he had to "push" Cochran to repay the loan, and at the time of his December 2016 interview with the FBI, Brooks said the alderman still had not paid him back, according to the prosecution filing.

Reached by telephone Friday, Brooks said he was unsure if all the money was ever repaid. But he said he didn't find Cochran's request strange.

"I have kids in college, so I know how it is," said Brooks, noting the loan came from the church, not him. "We help people. That's what we do."

Burge-related hearing grows contentious

Attorneys seek to oust special prosecutor

BY MEGAN CREPEAU
Chicago Tribune

An attempt to kick long-time prosecutors off cases involving disgraced ex-Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge's "midnight crew" grew contentious Friday as alleged victims' attorneys accused the prosecutors of overstepping their authority on the taxpayers' dime.

The prosecutors cried foul, noting their authority had been challenged only after things didn't go the attorneys' way.

"When I was dismissing cases, I was a great guy," said Robert Milan, who was appointed special prosecutor for Burge-related matters in 2017. "I look at each case individually, and (when) I don't decide the case their way ... now I have a conflict? Now I don't have the authority?"

Lawyers for Gerald Reed had raised the issue after Milan decided to proceed with a new trial despite Reed's conviction for a double murder being thrown out in December amid allegations that detectives under Burge tortured him into confessing.

At a hearing Friday at the Leighton Criminal Court Building, Reed's attorneys argued to LeRoy Martin Jr., the Criminal Division's presiding judge, that Milan has a conflict of interest and that State's Attorney Kim Foxx's office should instead prosecute the case.

The state's attorney's office hasn't handled Burge cases since a judge ruled more than 15 years ago that then-State's Attorney Richard Devine had a conflict of interest.

Milan, who rose to Devine's first assistant before going into private practice, was the most recent attorney appointed special prosecutor amid the continuing Burge scandal. He and his associates are handling some 20 cases that involve Burge or detectives under his command.

In a court filing this week, Reed's attorneys accused the special prosecutors of dragging out hearings and pursuing cases simply to line their pockets. The county has paid the special prosecutors millions of dollars to handle Burge cases, they said.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Former Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge was convicted of lying about torturing suspects in 2010.

"Do voters and taxpayers distrust the (Office of the Special Prosecutor), since for 17 years a non-government entity has been in place that can only survive if there is continuous Burge litigation?" the filing said.

In court Friday, Milan called the request to disqualify him a disingenuous effort to pick a more favorable prosecutor.

"(They) never complained about it until I recently made the decision on the Reed case," Milan said. "This is a thinly veiled attempt to forum-shop prosecutors."

Martin said he would issue a ruling next month.

In court documents, Reed's attorneys asked Martin to refer "all Burge-related matters" back to Foxx, but in court Friday, they clarified that their request applied only to Reed's case and two other accusers named in the filing.

Reed's attorneys also argued the special prosecutors' authority extends only to handling post-conviction claims brought by Burge accusers, not any subsequent retrials that may result after those convictions have been thrown out.

If Martin rules that Milan has no authority to prosecute murders, it could have a major ripple effect on other Burge-related cases.

During Friday's hearing, Martin's interest seemed piqued by whether Foxx operates under the same conflict of interest that disqualified her two predecessors from dealing with Burge cases, referring to that at one point as the "more interesting question."

If the special prosecutors were removed from handling Burge cases, Martin said, Foxx's office would have to start from scratch, causing a potential delay of years.

Inmates seeking their freedom over alleged Burge-related abuses might not like seeing their cases "go to the back of the line," Martin said.

Joel Brodsky, an attorney for another Burge accuser, also went before Martin on Friday challenging Milan's authority to continue handling that case.

Citing the death of a key witness, uncooperative remaining witnesses and the "passage of time," Milan dropped the double murder charges in April against James Gibson, saying he couldn't prove him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Milan, though, made it clear he didn't think that Gibson had been wrongly convicted.

Brodsky filed a petition to have a judge certify Gibson as innocent but did not notify Milan. Instead, Brodsky sent what Milan called a "threat letter" warning that the special prosecutor could be sued if he opposed the petition.

Milan said the letter was "unconscionable." Brodsky, who has been banned from practicing in federal court for six months because of unprofessional tactics, said the letter was merely "cautionary."

Burge and his "midnight crew" of detectives have been accused of torturing confessions — mostly for murder — from more than 100 black suspects in the 1970s and '80s in a scandal that has cost the city well in excess of $100 million in jury awards, court settlements and legal fees.

Burge, who was fired from the department in 1993 and convicted of lying about the torture in 2010, served 4½ years in prison and on home confinement. He died last September at 70.

Western Illinois U. president steps down

BY DAWN RHODES
Chicago Tribune

The president of Western Illinois University has resigned after eight years in the role.

Jack Thomas, who has led the university based in Macomb and the Quad Cities since 2011, announced his decision to step down at a board of trustees meeting Friday and later issued a statement confirming his departure.

Thomas, 58, said he will leave office June 30. Trustees later said Thomas will go on administrative leave through June 30, 2021, during which Western will continue to pay him his base salary of $270,528.

Thomas' departure comes as trustees were scheduled to discuss a performance review and the terms of his contract. The board also was scheduled Friday to hire a new provost, Martin Abraham, who instead will serve as temporary president until trustees can appoint an interim leader.

Before becoming president, Thomas was provost and academic vice president from 2008 to 2011.

"At this pivotal time in our history, I believe the university would best be served by new leadership," Thomas said in the statement.

"It has been a privilege serving as president, provost, and as a member of the Illinois Board of Higher Education during this historic period. Despite the difficulties our state has faced with regards to the budget and loss of population, our university remains resilient. We are a world-class university, and during my final days as president, I will work to ensure everything is in place for the new leadership to begin the next chapter in Western's history."

After his leave, Thomas will be able to join the faculty as a tenured distinguished service professor, effective July 1, 2021.

"President Thomas has been dedicated and committed to serving our students," board Chairman Greg Aguilar said in a statement. "He has mentored countless students and impacted tens of thousands of lives for the good. Again, we wish to thank President Thomas for the leadership he has provided."

As with many of the state's universities, Western has struggled in recent years with falling enrollment and financial problems that resulted in layoffs and furloughs of staff and faculty, falling credit ratings and elimination of programs.

From a high of 13,602 students in 2006, enrollment plummeted to 8,502 students last fall, a drop of more than 37 percent.

There also have been multiple rounds of layoffs, including in March, when 132 employees were let go.

Thomas said reduced state funding, the state's budget impasse, population declines in the region and increases in students leaving Illinois for college all have contributed to Western's woes.

"Without a doubt, I have had to make some difficult decisions — including ones that have sometimes been very unpopular, but nevertheless were always made with the best interests of the overall University's future at heart," Thomas wrote.

Thomas' departure is the latest in major leadership shifts at the university. In March, Gov. J.B. Pritzker appointed an entirely new board, ushering in seven new trustees.

"The new board will focus its efforts on revitalizing WIU's student recruitment and outreach efforts, focusing investments on core programs, burnishing the university's reputation and brand throughout the state, and strengthening relationships with its surrounding communities," the governor said at the time.

Teen mom allowed to stay with baby left in alley

BY ELVIA MALAGÓN
Chicago Tribune

A Cook County judge cleared the way Friday for a teenage mother who allegedly abandoned her newborn last month to stay in the same house with her son.

The decision by Judge Stuart Lubin comes a day after the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services gave custody of the baby to his maternal grandmother.

The child's parents, a 16-year-old girl and a 17-year-old boy, had been barred from seeing the boy after they were charged with attempted murder in juvenile court. Both had since been released from custody and allowed to go home to their parents.

But at a brief hearing Friday before Lubin, the teen mom's attorney, Rajeev Bajaj, noted that the ban on her being with her son required her to find other lodging than her own home Thursday night — the first night the baby stayed with his maternal grandmother.

Lubin, who is assigned to the county's Juvenile Justice division, lifted the ban over the objection of prosecutors. With the ban lifted, Bajaj said the teen mom plans to live with her mother and the baby.

"Baby's good," Bajaj said after the hearing. "I just saw the baby. Baby is healthy and doing really well."

Before the hearing started at the juvenile courthouse, the teen mother cried into the arms of family members, but she did not say anything during the hearing.

The teen father, who also appeared in court Friday during a separate hearing, will also be allowed to visit the baby, but any restrictions must still be worked out with DCFS, his attorney said in court.

The 17-year-old boy was accompanied by his father and did not say anything during the hearing.

The Tribune is not naming the teens because they are juveniles.

The teen girl gave birth to the baby in her home in the South Old Irving Park neighborhood about 6 a.m. May 7, according to prosecutors. The teens wrapped the baby in a towel and left him in an alley, prosecutors have said.

A neighbor told police the teens were cleaning up blood in the apartment building and told her the girl had miscarried, according to prosecutors. About 1 p.m., the girl went to Community First Medical Center and told officials she had a miscarriage, according to sources.

At some point, the boy called his mother, Karla Antimo, and told her his girlfriend had given birth but that the baby had died, according to police and prosecutors. The teens had kept the pregnancy a secret.

Antimo, 37, drove to pick up her son, who was carrying a shopping bag with the baby inside. As they drove off to an unspecified location, Antimo realized the baby was still alive when she heard him making a noise, according to prosecutors. Antimo then drove to a nearby firehouse where firefighters worked to save the boy's life.

Antimo, who initially told firefighters that she found the abandoned baby in an alley as she was parking, was charged with disorderly conduct, a felony. A judge noted last month, though, that Antimo's actions likely saved the boy's life.

Schaumburg man charged for assaulting woman on forest preserve path is released on bond

By GEORGE HOUDE
Chicago Tribune

A 27-year-old Schaumburg man was free on bond Friday after he was arrested and charged with sexually assaulting a woman as she walked on a path in a northwest suburban forest preserve, authorities said.

Bail for Ryan Patterson was set at $150,000 Wednesday in Cook County Circuit Court and he was released from custody after posting the required 10 percent bond, authorities said. He was charged with aggravated criminal sexual assault and kidnapping, authorities said.

Patterson is required to wear an electronic monitoring device while out on bond and was ordered to have no contact with the 48-year-old woman, authorities said. He also was ordered to turn in his passport and any firearms he owns, authorities said.

The woman told police that Patterson obtained her cellphone number during the attack and that he texted her afterward to arrange a date, authorities said.

The incident occurred during the evening hours of May 30 in the Arthur L. Janura Forest Preserve, located south of the Jane Addams Memorial Tollway and west of Barrington Road in Hoffman Estates, authorities said.

Prosecutors said the woman was walking on a path when Patterson pushed her to the ground and pulled her into a wooded area, taking her cellphone, prosecutors said. He ordered her to remove her clothes and then assaulted her, prosecutors said.

Prosecutors said Patterson told the woman that assaulting females was his “fetish” and that he had difficulty forming relationships, prosecutors said.

Afterward, Patterson helped the woman find her phone, which he had tossed into the woods, by dialing her number, prosecutors said.

Cook County sheriff’s investigators were able to track Patterson through his cellphone and the woman was able to identify him, authorities said.

Authorities said Patterson works as an actuary. His next court date is July 8 in Rolling Meadows branch court.

Investigators suspect Patterson may have assaulted other women in the area and asked anyone with information to call the sheriff’s office at 708-865-4896.

By pointing the finger at Iran, Trump was keeping a public spotlight on an adversary he accuses of terrorism but also has invited to negotiate. The approach is similar to his diplomacy with North Korea, which has quieted talk of war but not yet achieved his goal of nuclear disarmament. Iran has shown little sign of backing down, creating uncertainty about how far the Trump administration can go with its campaign of increasing pressure through sanctions.

Iran denied any involvement in the attacks and accused Washington of waging an “Iranophobic campaign” of economic warfare.

“The U.S. economic war and terrorism against the Iranian people as well as its massive military presence in the region have been and continue to be the main sources of insecurity and instability in the wider Persian Gulf region and the most significant threat to its peace and security,” Iran’s U.N. mission said.

have the desired effect.

“They’ve been told in very strong terms we want to get them back to the table,” Trump said. Just a day earlier, the president took the opposite view, tweeting that it was “too soon to even think about making a deal” with Iran’s leaders. “They are not ready, and neither are we!”

Trump last year withdrew the United States from an international agreement to limit Iran’s nuclear program that was signed in 2015 under his predecessor, President Barack Obama. He has since then reinstated economic sanctions aimed at compelling the Iranians to return to the negotiating table. Just last month the U.S. ended waivers that allowed some countries to continue buying Iranian oil, a move that is starving Iran of oil income and that coincided with what U.S. officials called a surge in intelligence pointing to Iranian preparations for attacks against U.S. forces and interests in the Gulf region.

In response to those intelligence warnings, the U.S. on May 5 announced it was accelerating the deployment of the USS Abraham Lincoln aircraft carrier battle group to the Gulf region. It also sent four nuclear-capable B-52 bombers to Qatar and has beefed up its defenses in the region by deploying more Patriot air defense systems.

Bob and Judy Lundgren sell Queen of Hearts raffle tickets from a trailer outside the McHenry VFW post on Thursday.

Raffle

Players buy raffle tickets and write a number on the back of each one. Each week, a ticket is drawn, the envelope matching the number written on the ticket is opened and the card inside is revealed. If it’s the queen of hearts, the player wins the jackpot. If it’s some other card, the player may win a lesser prize, and the game continues, with the pot rolling over and new ticket purchases driving it higher.

VFW members hope the new rules keep things from getting out of hand this time, and to temper expectations.

“This is not a lottery,” Lungren said. “It’s not going to be forever. It’s to fix our facility and support our programs.”

Tickets will cost $5 each, rather than $1, to reduce the number of tickets sold and the number that players must fill out.

To prevent the 30 or so volunteers and staff members from burning out, sales will be limited to during the day on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

That will free up the post to be rented out for banquets and for members to enjoy the steak and lobster dinners on Saturday nights.

The post also canceled its Sunday bingo games, drawing complaints on the post Facebook page from longtime players. Officials said they’re trying to balance their resources.

“We want our members to enjoy the VFW as well,” Lungren said. “Because of the crowds, members couldn’t enjoy our club.”

The new game will use only 22 cards, each 10 through ace and two jokers, rather than the 54 cards used last time, and won’t start over on the second joker, which ran up the total last time.

To spread the winnings, players will be awarded $5,000 for a 10, $10,000 for a jack, $15,000 for a king, $20,000 for an ace, $25,000 for a queen of clubs spades or diamonds, and $30,000 for a joker.

Forty percent of the pool will fund veterans’ programs and improvements to the facility, while 10% will roll over into the next week’s pot.

Past proceeds helped pay for a new parking lot, a new trailer from which to sell tickets, new sidewalks and landscaping, electrical work and a new kitchen. Lungren said the money also supported local charities and the VFW National

Home for Children in Eaton Rapids, Michigan, which offers counseling, housing, daycare and other resources for families of active duty military personnel and veterans.

As a small number of ticket buyers shivered in the morning cold Thursday, staff members passed out brochures breaking down the post’s financial windfall from the game.

After taxes, prizes paid out last year and money used to establish the pot for this year, the post took in almost $1.1 million from the game, and spent $900,000 on property improvements, $100,000 on raffle expenses and $75,000 in donations to support veterans, programs and the community.

The success of the McHenry veterans’ raffle has prompted other veterans groups to try running their own games.

Veterans groups in Antioch, Fox Lake, Gurnee, Huntley, Libertyville and Lake in the Hills have started similar raffles, but none has had the jackpots or crowds that McHenry attracted.

Libertyville American Legion Post 329 began its own Queen of Hearts raffle this spring, with drawings every Wednesday, but it only sells tickets two days a week, and its pot is about $1,500, Cmdr. Bruce Matsunaga said.

“Everybody’s jumping on the bandwagon,” he said. “We thought we could ride the coattails of the publicity for McHenry. We’re progressing very slowly.”

Like many veterans groups, what the legion could use even more than money is younger members. The organization has almost 150 members, but only about 15 are really active, and four of them are more than 90 years old.

Matsunaga hopes proceeds from the raffle can be used to establish scholarships for veterans and their children. “That,” he said, “might attract more veterans.”

night, people were hoping for a miracle,” Avila said.

Just two days earlier, indictments were announced against a mother and daughter accused of luring 19-year-old Marlen Ochoa-Lopez to their home with promises of free baby clothes on April 23, then strangling her and cutting her baby from her womb in a desperate bid to raise the child as their own.

Clarisa Figueroa, 46, and her daughter, Desiree, 24, are charged with first-degree murder. The elder Figueroa’s boyfriend, Piotr Bobak, 40, has been charged with concealing a homicidal death.

The state attorney’s office had not yet announced Friday if additional charges would be sought, although prosecutors commonly upgrade charges when a victim dies as a result of injuries from a crime.

“The state attorney’s office will make a determination on additional charges in this case after the medical examiner’s office and police department have completed their investigations,” prosecutors said in a statement.

The gruesome details of the case stunned the city and garnered national media attention.

Prosecutors said the elder Figueroa had announced in October that she was pregnant — a surprise to family who knew she had her fallopian tubes tied. Over the next several months, she posted photos on Facebook of an ultrasound and a decorated nursery, complete with a crib. She said she would name the baby Xander after a 20-year-old son who died last year, according to prosecutors.

As her phony due date drew near, prosecutors said, she and her daughter plotted to kill a pregnant woman to steal her baby.

Prosecutors have alleged that Ochoa-Lopez, a mother of a young child who was nine months pregnant, reached out and touched the nose of the family dog as Figueroa, sitting atop her, took an agonizing four to five minutes to strangle her with a cable.

After killing Ochoa-Lopez and cutting her baby from her womb, prosecutors said, Figueroa continued to claim the infant as her own, even seeking money on a crowdfunding site for the critically injured boy.

Ochoa-Lopez’s body was found in a garbage can outside the Figueroa home on May 14 with the coaxial cable used to strangle her still around her neck.

Police and prosecutors said the younger Figueroa gave “a full video-recorded confession” to assisting her mother in strangling Ochoa-Lopez.

Prosecutors said Bobak helped clean the scene after Ochoa-Lopez’s killing and later shared the crowdfunding site on his Facebook page.

The family plans to have a private funeral for Yovanny.

To stem obsession, Columbine could fall

As the obsessed and curious flock, razing building again raised

By KATHLEEN FOODY
Associated Press

DENVER — Two decades after the name “Columbine” became synonymous with a school shooting, the suburban Denver community surrounding the school is debating whether it’s time to tear down a building that also became a beacon for people obsessed with the killings.

School officials said the number of people trying to get close to or even inside the school reached record levels this year, the 20th anniversary of the 1999 attack that killed 13 people. People try to peek into the windows of the school library, mistaking it for the long-demolished room where most victims died.

The buses of tourists have mostly stopped, but not the visitors. This year alone, security staff contacted more than 2,400 “unauthorized” people on Columbine’s campus.

Then, a few days before the anniversary, a young woman described as obsessed with the attack flew to Colorado and bought a shotgun, killing only herself yet sparking lockdowns and new fears. School security has intercepted others with a similar infatuation with the crime and its teen perpetrators — so-called Columbiners.

District security chief John McDonald can rattle off some of the most frightening instances of people who came to the campus: An Ohio couple who was later charged with planning a domestic terror attack; a Utah teen later arrested for a bombing plot against his school; and a Texas man apprehended at the school after he said he was filled by one of the shooter’s spirits and intended to “complete his mission.”

“These people, they want the building,” McDonald said. “They want to experience it, to walk the halls. The only way we can stop that interest in the building is to move it. Otherwise they’re not going to stop coming.”

But Columbine, named after the official state flower, represents more than one day to this suburban area southeast of Denver. Boisterous call-and-response chants of “We are Columbine” dominate school pep rallies. At the nearby memorial just over a crest named “Rebel Hill” for the school’s mascot, a plaque quotes an unnamed student: “You’re a Columbine Rebel for life and no one can ever take that away from you.”

“It’s not just a building, it’s like a second home to us,” said Jenn Thompson, who as a 15-year-old huddled inside a science classroom during the attack. “It’s still standing 20 years later. It represents us, still standing 20 years later.” She hopes her own daughter, now 8, can attend the school, home to about 1,700 students.

The fates of mass shooting sites around the United States are varied.

In Newtown, Connecticut, voters authorized the demolition of the Sandy Hook Elementary School building where 26 students and teachers were killed in 2012 and construction of a new school with the same name near the first site. The building where 17 people died at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, in 2018 is also expected to be razed.

After a shooter killed 12 people inside an Aurora, Colorado, theater in 2012, the building reopened with a new name. In Orlando, the owner of the Pulse nightclub plans to make the site into a museum and a memorial to the 49 people gunned down there in 2016.

The discussion of Columbine’s future is likely to take months. An initial proposal would keep the school’s new library, which was built after the attack, and construct a new school on the existing campus.

An online survey gauging community support will close this week. District officials will spend the summer reviewing and summarizing responses. If they decide to present a plan to the school board in August, its members will determine whether to put the estimated $60 million to $70 million expense on November ballots.

Conversations with victims’ families, survivors and current staff convinced district officials that changing the school’s name was a non-starter, said Jefferson County Public Schools Superintendent Jason Glass.

“The sense of pride is real,” he said.

Some of those closest to the shooting have changed their minds over the years on the best course of action.

After the attack, Frank DeAngelis, then the school’s principal, met with the families of those killed, students and staff about their scarred building’s future. He said the majority felt demolishing it meant “the two killers had won.”

But after years of coping with unwanted visitors, DeAngelis, who retired in 2014, said he now supports the proposal to demolish and rebuild the school.

“I think if we would have known or projected what was going to happen, we may have had a different discussion about going back into the building,” DeAngelis said.

Trump says he’d ‘of course’ tell FBI if he gets foreign dirt

By JONATHAN LEMIRE
AND ZEKE MILLER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump shifted gears Friday on election interference, saying “of course” he would go to the FBI or the attorney general if a foreign power offered him dirt about an opponent.

Trump’s new stance was a walk back — to a degree — after he set off a Washington firestorm earlier in the week by asserting he would not necessarily contact law enforcement if offered damaging material from an overseas source.

But in his latest comments, the president still said he would look at the information to see whether it was “incorrect.”

“Of course, you have to look at it,” Trump said during a birthday appearance on “Fox and Friends.” He added: “But of course, you give it to the FBI or report it to the attorney general or somebody like that. You couldn’t have that happen with our country, and everybody understands that.”

That was a step back from his comments to ABC days earlier.

“OK, let’s put yourself in a position: You’re a congressman, somebody comes up and says, ‘Hey I have information on your opponent.’ Do you call the FBI? You don’t,” Trump said in an interview that aired Wednesday. “I’ll tell you what. I’ve seen a lot of things over my life. I don’t think in my whole life I’ve ever called the FBI.”

His assertion that he would be open to accepting a foreign power’s help in his 2020 campaign alarmed Democrats, who condemned it as a call for further election interference while Republicans struggled to defend his comments.

Asked by ABC News what he would do if Russia

MARK WILSON/GETTY
President Trump walked back his earlier statement about not calling the FBI if offered foreign campaign help.

or another country offered him dirt on his election opponent, Trump said: “I think I’d want to hear it.” He added that he’d have no obligation to call the FBI. “There’s nothing wrong with listening.”

Special counsel Robert Mueller painstakingly documented Russian efforts to boost Trump’s campaign and undermine that of his Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton.

In a segment released Friday from the president’s interview earlier this week, Trump told ABC that “it doesn’t matter” what former White House counsel Don McGahn told investigators and that McGahn may have been confused when he told prosecutors he had been instructed to seek Mueller’s removal.

McGahn was a crucial witness for Mueller, spending hours with investigators and offering detailed statements about episodes central to the special counsel’s investigation into possible obstruction of justice. McGahn described how Trump directed him to press the Justice Department for Mueller to be fired by insisting that he raise what the president perceived as the special counsel’s conflicts of interest.

Trump denied that account, saying, “The story on that very simply, No. 1, I was never going to fire Mueller. I never suggested firing Mueller.”

Asked why McGahn would have lied, Trump said, “Because he wanted to make himself look like a good lawyer. Or he believed it because I would constantly tell anybody that would listen — including you, including the media — that Robert Mueller was conflicted. Robert Mueller had a total conflict of interest.”

Though Trump tried to cast doubt on McGahn’s credibility, it is clear from the Mueller report that investigators took seriously his statements, which in many instances were accompanied by contemporaneous notes, and relied on his account to paint a portrait of the president’s conduct. It is also doubtful that McGahn, a lawyer, would have had any incentive to make a misstatement given that lying to law enforcement is a crime and Mueller’s team charged multiple Trump aides with making false statements.

Though Mueller’s investigation didn’t directly establish a criminal conspiracy between Russia and the president’s campaign, Trump repeatedly praised WikiLeaks in 2016 and at one point implored hackers to dig up dirt on Hillary Clinton.

Debate lineups: Warren on 1st night, Biden, Sanders on 2nd

By DAVID BAUDER
Associated Press

NEW YORK — NBC set the lineup for its two-night debate of 2020 presidential contenders later this month, with a top-heavy second session that will pit former Vice President Joe Biden against 2016 Democratic runner-up, Bernie Sanders, the youthful Mayor Pete Buttigieg and California Sen. Kamala Harris.

The first night, June 26 in Miami, is headlined by Sens. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts and Cory Booker of New Jersey, along with former Texas Rep. Beto O’Rourke.

Representatives of 20 campaigns gathered in a conference room at NBC headquarters Friday to watch slips of paper with candidates’ names picked out of two boxes. There were separate boxes with the names of candidates polling at above or below 2 percent — an attempt to make sure most of the lesser-known candidates were not grouped together and given the stigma of a minor-league debate.

Still, when four of the six top-polling candidates landed on June 27, including the clear front-runner in Biden, that night was quickly seen as the one with the biggest stakes.

Being paired with Biden, 76, and Sanders, 77, gives Buttigieg an opportunity to emphasize the “next generation” theme that the South Bend, Indiana, mayor has been touting. At 37, Buttigieg is the youngest of the leading contenders.

The six female contenders will be evenly divided between the two nights. The two African American candidates, Booker and Harris, will also be on separate nights. Ideologically, two favorites of the party’s liberal wing, Sanders and Warren, won’t be going head-to-head, either.

Among the rest of the field, Washington Gov. Jay

Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., seen at a campaign house party on Friday, will debate June 26 on NBC.

Inslee could find benefits in drawing the first night with fewer front-runners to emphasize his climate change-oriented effort. Former Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper, who has been among the most aggressive critics of Sanders’ democratic socialism, will have a chance to make those points to him face-to-face.

NBC will face its own test, to see if it makes compelling programming out of crowded stages on the opening nights of debate season. The debates will be shown from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m., on the broadcast network, as well as on MSNBC and Telemundo, and it will be streamed on various platforms. NBC personalities Lester Holt, Savannah Guthrie, Chuck Todd, Rachel Maddow and Jose Diaz-Balart will all be featured.

Featured on June 26 in Miami will be Warren, Booker, O’Rourke, Inslee, Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar, former Housing and Urban Development Secretary Julian Castro, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, former Rep. John Delaney of Maryland, Rep. Tulsi Gabbard of Hawaii and Rep. Tim Ryan of Ohio.

The June 27 lineup has Biden, Sanders, Harris, Buttigieg, Hickenlooper, New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, Colorado Sen. Michael Bennet, author Marianne Williamson, entrepreneur Andrew Yang and Rep. Eric Swalwell of California.

“This is a terrific lineup because there will be a real debate over the key set of choices in this Democratic primary,” said Sanders’ campaign manager Faiz Shakir.

Advisers of several campaigns have argued that debates are, for their candidates, as much about avoiding bad moments as they are about making any gains in the race. For the rest of the field, the national stage is a chance for that rare viral moment that elevates a struggling campaign.

NEWS BRIEFING

Trump says Conway won't be fired for violating Hatch Act

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump said he won't fire White House aide Kellyanne Conway after a watchdog agency recommended her removal for repeatedly violating a law that limits political activity by government workers.

Trump told "Fox & Friends" on Friday that he was briefed on the Office of Special Counsel investigation noting, "It looks to me like they're trying to take away her right of free speech and that's just not fair."

OSC, which is unrelated to special counsel Robert Mueller's office, said in a letter to Trump that Conway has been a "repeat offender" of the Hatch Act by disparaging Democratic presidential candidates while speaking in her official capacity during TV interviews and on social media.

"She's got to have a right of responding to questions," Trump added.

Calls mount for compromise over unpopular Hong Kong bill

HONG KONG — Hong Kong Chief Executive Carrie Lam faced calls from both outside and within her government Friday to delay extradition legislation that has spurred massive protests.

Some members of the Executive Council, Hong Kong's Cabinet, said she should perhaps rethink plans to rush the bills' passage. Meanwhile, a group of former senior government officials urged her not to force a confrontation by pushing ahead with the unpopular bills, which would allow Hong Kong suspects to be tried in mainland China.

As of Friday afternoon, more than 30,000 people had signed a petition protesting the use of force by police during clashes with protesters Wednesday.

More than 1,000 people joined a peaceful protest Friday where speakers urged Lam to step down.

Local governments seek negotiating entity in opioid suit

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Lawyers suing over the toll of opioids asked a judge Friday to allow a structure for all 25,000 municipal and county governments in the U.S. to be paid — if a settlement can be reached with companies that make and distribute powerful prescription painkillers.

The approach, if approved, would create dueling negotiating systems as state governments are also in collective settlement negotiations with the drug industry.

The motion filed Friday requests the creation of "a unified body to enter into further negotiations with defendants."

Hundreds of local governments and other entities, such as hospitals, have accused pharmaceutical companies of downplaying the addictive nature of opioids and prescription painkillers.

Court rules against Trump on immigrant teen abortion policy

WASHINGTON — A federal appeals court in Washington ruled Friday against a Trump administration policy it described as a "blanket ban" preventing immigrant teens in government custody from getting abortions, and it kept in place an order blocking the policy.

The policy, which dates to 2017, prohibited shelters from facilitating abortions for children held in government shelters after entering the country illegally. The policy has not been in force since March 2018, when a judge blocked it, writing that the government couldn't implement a policy that strips minors of the right to make reproductive choices. On Friday, a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upheld that ruling.

The opinion for the panel of judges — Sri Srinivasan, Robert Wilkins and Laurence Silberman — was unsigned. Beyond that agreement, however, Silberman wrote a dissent arguing in support of giving officials a limited window to transfer a minor out of government custody to the care of a sponsor, where the child could then obtain an abortion without the government's assistance.

The Trump administration could now ask the full U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit to hear the case.

It could also appeal to the Supreme Court. But Justice Brett Kavanaugh likely wouldn't take part in the case. That's because he ruled on the case at an earlier stage as a judge on the D.C. Circuit, where he made the argument Silberman repeated about placing a minor in a sponsor's care. That would leave four liberals and four conservatives to rule on the case.

Sudan acknowledges violations in sit-in dispersal

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Sudan's ruling military acknowledged that security forces committed violations when they moved in to disperse protesters at a sit-in camp in Khartoum last week.

The spokesman for the ruling military council, Gen. Shams Eddin Kabashi, said late Thursday that an investigation was underway and that several military officers were already in custody for alleged "deviation" from the action plan set by military leaders.

"We feel sorry for what happened," Kabashi said. "We will hold accountable anyone, regardless of their rank, if proven to have committed violations."

Kabashi did not elaborate on the violations beyond describing them as "painful and outrageous." Over 100 people were killed in the capital and across Sudan in a sweeping crackdown, according to protest organizers.

Assange to face full extradition hearing in '20

LONDON — WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange told a British court Friday that "175 years of my life is effectively at stake," as a judge ruled that he would face a full extradition hearing in early 2020.

At a largely procedural hearing, Assange appeared via a video link from Belmarsh, a maximum-security prison on the outskirts of London.

A Westminster Magistrates' Court judge said the full extradition hearing to decide whether Assange should be sent to the United States to stand trial for espionage will take place in February.

One of Assange's lawyers, Mark Summer, said the extradition "represents an outrageous and full-frontal assault on journalistic rights." Assange is under investigation for his role in the disclosure of a trove of secret military and diplomatic cables.

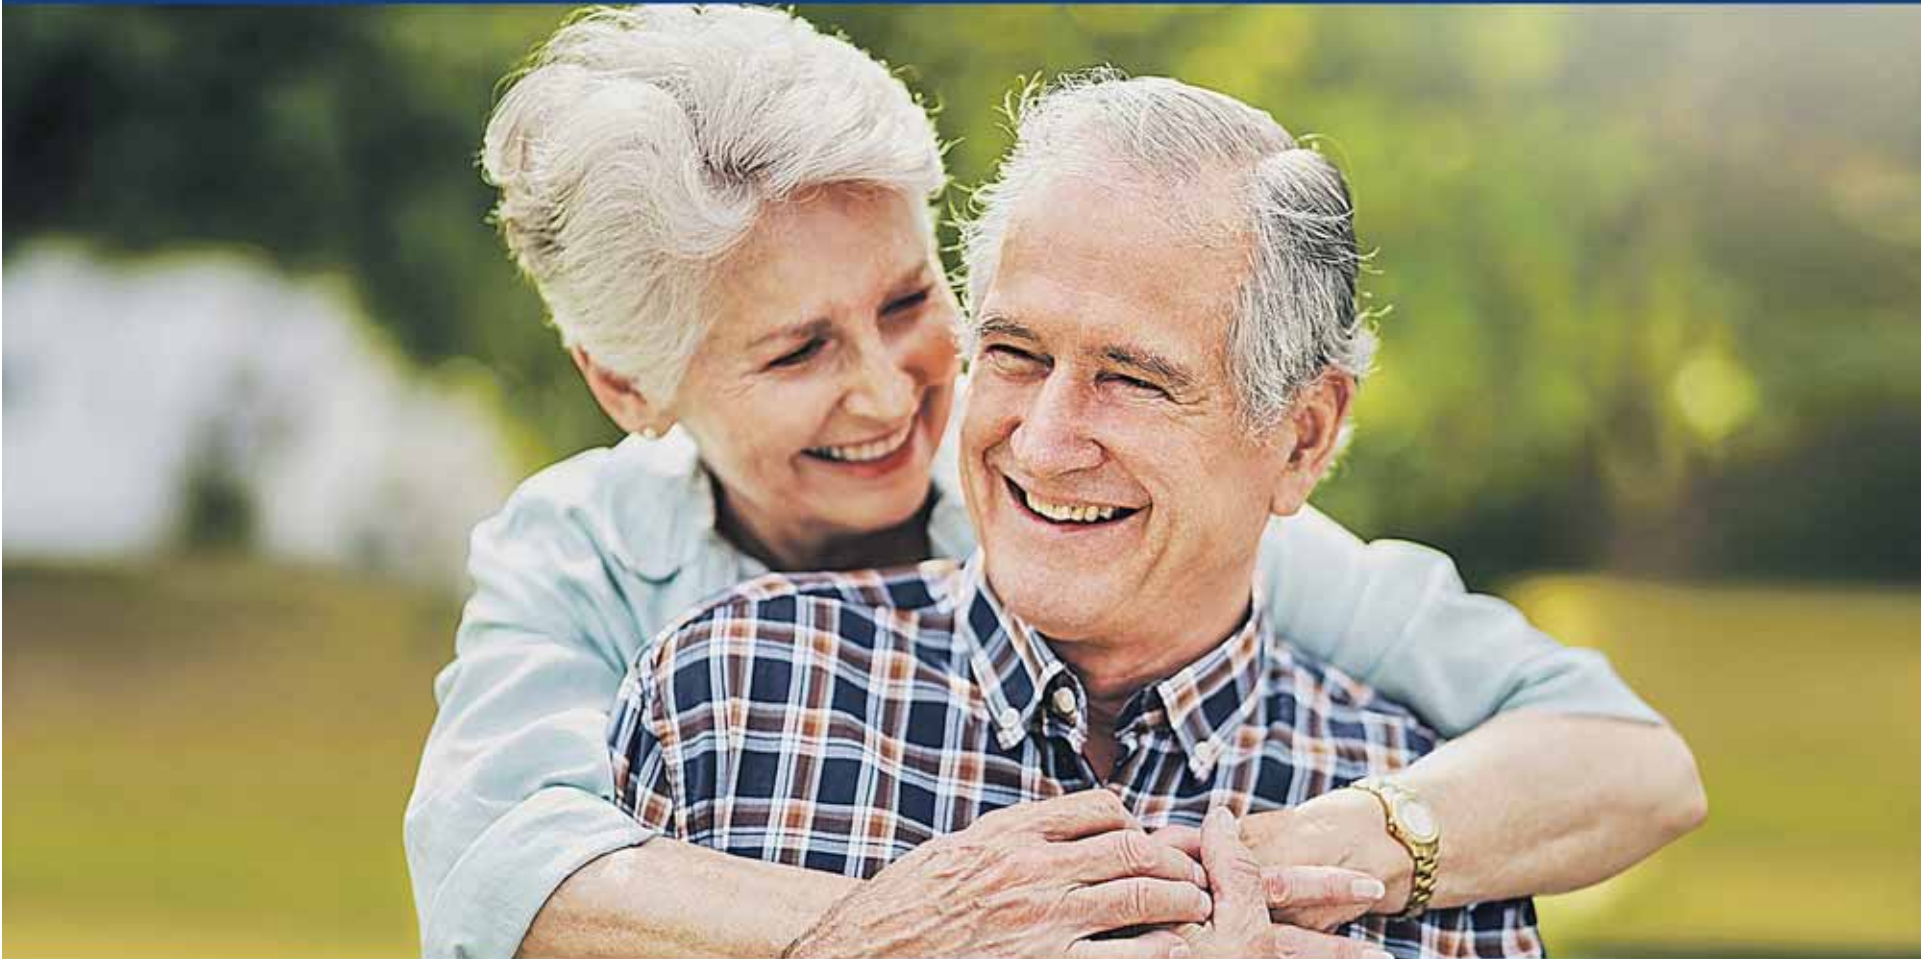

In New Zealand: The man accused of deadly attacks on two mosques smirked as his lawyer entered not guilty pleas to terrorism, murder and attempted murder charges Friday before a judge who set his trial for next May.

The courtroom was filled with 80 survivors and family members of the 51 who were slain, while about another 60 watched the hearing on video in an overflow room at the Christchurch High Court.

Brenton Tarrant, the 28-year-old Australian accused of the March 15 shootings, appeared at the hearing via video link from a small room at the maximum security prison in Auckland where he's being held. The link was muted and he didn't attempt to speak or show much emotion.

Marijuana dispensary offers credit card

Columbia Care rolls out option as industry works to go beyond cash-only sales

By ALLY MAROTTI
Chicago Tribune

Marijuana company Columbia Care is rolling out a credit card for customers to use at its dispensaries, creating a new payment option for a clientele that has largely had to deal in cash.

Like banks, credit card companies hesitate to get involved in the cannabis industry because the drug remains illegal at the federal level. That has meant most dispensaries around the country are only able to accept cash even though customers often spend more than $100 at a time. Many dispensaries have onsite ATMs, and some have systems that accept debit or ATM cards.

Columbia Care, which has a dispensary in the Jefferson Park neighborhood, has been testing its credit card in New York and plans to roll it out this month in Illinois, said CEO Nicholas Vita. Patients spend an average of $144 per visit at the Chicago dispensary.

"We have an industry where people have to use their debit cards or ATMs or cash to make purchases. It's like 1974," he said. "We've seen what happened when we introduced access to this capital, and it has a huge impact in giving patients access to the products they need and want."

Patrons will fill out a form on a tablet in the dispensaries to get qualified, Vita said. The process is fast, and typically customers will be able to use their credit card to make a purchase on the same visit, he said.

Columbia Care is working with financial institutions and other intermediaries in each of the 12 states it operates in, plus Puerto Rico and Washington, D.C., on the credit cards. Vita declined to disclose the company's local partner. The cards do not have fees, but the annual percentage rate for Illinois users will be 15.99%, Vita said. The national average annual percentage rate is 17.73%, according to Credit cards.com.

At the New York dispensaries that tested the credit card, customers bought 18% more per dispensary visit when paying with credit. That means people can buy larger quantities and come in less frequently, a perk for patients for whom traveling is difficult and for customers traveling long distances to the dispensary, Vita said.

Vita also said that if customers are able to use a credit card to buy marijuana just like they would any other product, they'll get used to buying the drug.

Customers who purchase cannabis for medicinal purposes typically spend between $120 and $195 per dispensary visit, said Chris Stone, CEO of Ascend Illinois. The total amount spent varies each week and throughout the state. Once Illinois dispensaries start selling recreational marijuana on Jan. 1, the price per visit will likely increase, Stone said.

Ascend's dispensaries in Springfield and Collinsville accept cash and debit cards, Stone said. The company has been searching for the right mechanism to accept credit cards, but hasn't found it.

Other solutions for processing marijuana sales do exist, but they are not widespread and have been controversial at times. Earlier this month, a cannabis delivery company sued one of its competitors in California, alleging the way it processes payments commits wire and bank fraud.

In other cases, payments have been processed off-shore or in ways that bypass traditional credit card processing. For example, a dispensary may let the customer buy a gift card with their credit card then use that gift card to purchase marijuana. Or the dispensary purchase may show up on the customer's statement as a flower shop purchase.

Some companies are rolling out ways to make electronic payments. Hawaii dispensaries started asking customers to download Colorado-based payment app CanPay in 2017. Customers used their checking accounts to pay through the app, which then transferred the money to the accounts dispensaries set up at a Colorado credit union. A California-based company called Zodaka also is working to roll out its bank-to-bank payment platform to dispensaries.

"This has always been an issue that has plagued the cannabis industry," said Morgan Fox, spokesman for the National Cannabis Industry Association. "Since people have been looking for viable alternatives, people have been trying to fill that gap in lieu of better federal policy."

Both state and federal lawmakers have pushed legislation that would protect financial institutions working with cannabis companies that comply with their local laws. Banks and credit card companies have said they would need federal protections to feel comfortable enough to wade into the industry.

Tech firm Cisco looking to lease in old post office

RYAN ORI
On Real Estate

Technology firm Cisco Systems is close to becoming the latest office tenant in the redeveloped old main post office along the Chicago River.

Cisco is negotiating a lease for about 130,000 square feet in the 2.8 million-square-foot former old post office, according to real estate sources.

If completed as expected, it would be the latest in a recent string of leases signed by developer 601W Cos., which is wrapping up an $800 million-plus redevelopment.

The first tenants are set to move into the long-vacant behemoth at 433 W. Van Buren St. by September.

San Jose, California-based Cisco is expected to consolidate suburban and downtown workers in the new space.

Cisco currently leases space in a nearby building at 525 W. Van Buren St., as well as a larger office in suburban Rosemont.

"Cisco continuously evaluates its real estate portfolio," Cisco spokeswoman Robyn Blum said in an emailed statement. "We are looking at real estate options in the area as part of our ongoing plan to align for current and future workforce requirements and provide a positive working environment for all."

Cisco's deal was first reported by Crain's Chicago Business.

New York-based 601W is represented in leasing by Telos Group brokers Steve Smith, Jamey Dix and Daniel Heckman.

The Tribune last month reported Uber is negotiating a 450,000-square-foot lease, which would be the largest in the old post office. Uber has called it a "a site of interest" but has yet to confirm plans to move there.

Companies that already have completed leases in the building include Walgreens Boots Alliance, Ferrara Candy, the Chicago Metropolitan Agency for Planning, Home Chef and ad agency AbelsonTaylor.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

E-scooters will help Chicago

This weekend, an important first step is being taken to beat Chicago congestion and give travelers more options. The city's dockless e-scooters and e-bikes pilot program begins Saturday and runs through Oct. 15.

A wide array of e-bike and e-scooter options provides a better alternative for commuters looking for affordable and accessible means of transportation. Safe and convenient, e-scooters and e-bikes allow people to get from point A to point B quickly, without waiting on public transportation schedules. They are also inexpensive, often costing less than a train ride or ride-share car trip. Most important for a city like Chicago, e-scooters and e-bikes help alleviate the hundreds of transit deserts that exist throughout the city. In these neighborhoods, transportation options are sparse, and travel time costs are high.

It's encouraging that the West Side, which I represent, was included in the initial pilot program. My constituents and I are thankful to have this new transportation option. Unfortunately, geographic bounds on the pilot zone limit the positive impacts the program can have on Chicago's transportation system. By failing to include the South Side in the pilot zone, we are missing an opportunity to expand transit options to neighborhoods that desperately need them. And the exclusion of downtown areas means that many people who might use them to commute or connect to the existing rail system won't have that ability.

If more services were introduced to the city, residents could easily get to and from the train, bus or even their destination without having to find and pay for parking on streets or in garages. Micromobility options help fill this crucial last-mile transportation gap, growing mass transit ridership and helping bring Chicagoans even closer to their destinations.

Micromobility services also replace car trips, taking more vehicles off the city's already overly crowded roads. This reduction in congestion leads to a reduction in pollution, helping pave the way for a greener city.

The public deserves more transportation options. We are making progress, but more can be done to expand opportunity and equity to residents in all of the city's neighborhoods.

Homeless shelter a godsend

Criticism of Pacific Garden Mission, which helps thousands of homeless and, yes, disabled people without discrimination based on race, sexual orientation or creed, is unconscionable. (It is accused of not being accommodating toward people with disabilities.)

I remember passing Pacific Garden Mission on State Street as a child and asking my mother what it was. She said it was a home for people who did not have a home. Eventually, Pacific Garden Mission had to expand to Canal Street because of the number of people who needed help, and I have had the privilege of visiting it several times. Every single day, it feeds or shelter more than a thousand people, some of them in wheelchairs. However, it is not an assisted living or nursing facility. Also, it is a church. Isn't it likely, then, that it will have religious services?

Pacific Garden Mission is very open about the fact that it is a church. It is not a flawless organization, but it does a spectacular job with its mission. Take it out of Chicago, and you will have utter chaos for the homeless. Pacific Garden Mission needs to do what it does best, and that is feed, clothe, shelter and job-train the homeless who are able to care for their own personal needs but need help with shelter and food.

Abuse of dairy farm animals

Perhaps the most troubling thing about the recent undercover footage released by Animal Recovery Mission (ARM) into conditions at Fair Oaks Farm is that, while appalled, I wasn't surprised by anything I saw. If you'd asked me what I'd expect to see on a farm like Fair Oaks, I would have described untrained and underpaid workers taking out their frustration on depressed and defenseless animals. I would have described the small pens (known within the industry as "hutches") used to isolate young calves, who are separated from their mothers almost immediately after birth, in which a large percentage of calves become so distraught that they starve themselves.

In a recorded statement posted to YouTube after the release of ARM's undercover video, Fair Oaks founder Mike McCloskey expresses remorse for the animals being abused on his farms and pledges to prevent this sort of cruelty on his farms going forward. He outlines new procedures and precautions that, while welcome, have much more to do with reassuring his customers than preventing cruelty to animals.

If McCloskey and Fair Oaks were sincere about preventing cruelty to animals, they would be talking about things like transitioning to group housing for calves, providing pasture access for cows and other husbandry practices that industrial-scale operations resist due to added cost. Considering the ongoing deregulation of industries including animal agriculture, at least for now, preventing this sort of cruelty to animals is simply up to each of us.

Fair Oaks workers reported abuse

It was encouraging to read that the culture at Fair Oaks Farms empowered employees to report the abusers before the undercover investigation was made public. Fair Oaks management should be applauded for taking prompt action to increase transparency and prevent future occurrences.

The Norman Atlantic, a Singapore-flagged tanker, burns in 1987 after an attack by Iran near the Strait of Hormuz.

The US can protect tankers from Iran, with help from allies

It was known as the "tanker war." In 1987, Iran wreaked havoc on global energy supplies moving through the Strait of Hormuz, using mines to attack Kuwaiti oil tankers and eventually triggering direct conflict between U.S. naval forces and Iranian vessels. The U.S. estimated that Iran had attacked more than 160 ships in its campaign to disrupt oil shipments from the Persian Gulf.

Washington says yes. The U.S. accuses Iran of carrying out a "blatant assault" on two tankers in the Gulf of Oman, one Japanese-owned and the other Norwegian-owned. The U.S. believes Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps may have used mines in the attacks. On Friday, U.S. Central Command released video that it said showed a Revolutionary Guard patrol boat pulling up alongside one of the tankers and retrieving an unexploded limpet mine off the ship's hull.

Iran is also suspected of using mines to attack four oil tankers off the coast of the United Arab Emirates in May. President Donald Trump said there was no doubt of Iran's involvement in the tanker attacks, calling the regime "a nation of terror. ... They're in deep, deep trouble."

For now, the priority for the U.S. and its allies should be to protect navigation. The West cannot allow the waters surrounding the Strait of Hormuz to be held hostage by Tehran. Nearly a third of the world's crude oil passes through those waters. Naval ships from the U.S. and its allies can escort oil tankers and other ships through the strait and the Gulf of Oman while the threat from Iran looms. That's what the U.S. did during the Tanker War.

As for Washington's longer-term strategy toward Iran, the Trump administration should stay on course by squeezing Tehran with sanctions until supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei's regime returns to the table to negotiate a better nuclear deal.

That deal must not only ensure Iran's halt of uranium enrichment, it needs to address the regime's propping up of terrorist groups and its pursuit of ballistic missiles. The 2015 nuclear deal Trump shelved was too narrow in its scope. The missing cog in Washington's strategy is Europe — its leaders continue to pin their hopes on the 2015 pact.

Washington's ramp-up of sanctions against Iran, particularly those aimed at Tehran's oil industry, have been effective. Iranian oil exports have dropped from 2.5 million barrels a day to below a million barrels. That has dealt a $10 billion broadside to Iran's economy.

If Iran is indeed behind the latest tanker attacks, Tehran's motive may be to lash out at U.S. sanctions. Constrain our oil shipments? We'll constrain yours with limpet mine attacks on tankers.

An escalation of military tension in the region is in nobody's interest, and the Iranians likely understand that. But U.S. sanctions are doing their work and should continue. If European leaders would get on board, chances increase that conflict with Iran can be resolved the right way — through negotiations.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

We need to consider valuable options lost due to Social Security ... The program's underfunding, which imposes added burdens on younger generations, means that current workers are denied even the returns available from risk-free government bonds.

Further, when retirement saving is replaced with Social Security taxes, Americans lose the power to choose the risk and return they will bear in financing retirement, forgoing far higher average returns that every financial adviser can demonstrate.

That substitution also imposes other restrictions. It eliminates the ability to leave accumulated retirement savings as a bequest if one dies before retirement. It sacrifices the ability to choose a lump-sum distribution of retirement savings, rather than being forced to receive a monthly annuity (which imposes a huge burden on those with shorter life expectancies). It sacrifices the ability to use accumulated funds for emergencies prior to retirement. It sacrifices the ability to retire and live on accumulated savings, starting before the program allows. ...

If Social Security was efficient, equitable, reliable and sustainable, defending the status quo might be sensible. ... So the sooner we realize the multiple inequities Social Security creates and the valuable options it eliminates, the sooner we might question how "sacred" everything about it should be.

Chicago Symphony Orchestra piccoloist/flutist Jennifer Gunn performed two ingeniously effective concertos with the CSO on Thursday in Orchestra Hall at Symphony Center.

IN PERFORMANCE

Soloists step into spotlight

By HOWARD REICH
Chicago Tribune

The intensely eclectic program the Chicago Symphony Orchestra performed Thursday night in Orchestra Hall offered the distinct pleasure of featuring two ensemble members in concerto premieres.

One work proved ingeniously effective, the other less so.

CSO piccoloist/flutist Jennifer Gunn had been scheduled to play the Chicago premiere of Ken Benshoof's Concerto in Three Movements for Piccolo and Orchestra in March, but the orchestra's seven-week strike derailed those performances. By quickly rescheduling Benshoof's opus for this week's subscription concerts, CSO music director Riccardo Muti signaled the importance he placed on this music.

The conductor's belief in the work was well placed, as an utterly disarming performance attested. This pastoral, gently lyrical piece was designed not to dazzle listeners but to seduce them. The opening solo phrases, which sounded very nearly improvised, instantly conveyed intimacy, pulling the audience toward a work that — for the most part — spoke softly and sweetly.

As Gunn unfurled the long-lined phrases Benshoof had penned for her, the orchestra provided texturally transparent accompaniment. But there was no question where the musical energy was coming from, the piccolo lines setting the terms of discussion for motifs the orchestra would embrace. To hear Gunn's themes echoed by her colleagues was to appreciate not only the craft of Benshoof's writing but the chamberlike aura these musicians can achieve.

Gunn and colleagues conjured a sense of serenity in the second movement, but there was more at work here than just silken phrases and long-held piccolo notes. The poignant pitch bends that composer Benshoof wrote into the score stood out for their expressive eloquence in an already poetic movement.

And who could resist the jazz-tinged finale, with its ebulliently syncopated rhythms, deliciously pungent dissonances and relentlessly driving vamps? Gunn dispatched the charismatic solo part with technical aplomb and whimsical spirit, no easy feat. Conductor Muti pulled off the concerto's witty ending so adroitly as to draw what sounded like a soft chuckle from the entire audience. That moment summed up the joy and appeal of this work, which easily could become standard repertoire for piccolo soloists.

The world premiere of James Stephenson's Bass Trombone Concerto proved nearly the opposite of the Benshoof composition in many ways, most obviously in its scoring. For while Benshoof leaned toward orchestral transparency and lightness, Stephenson summoned an enormous orchestra with an array of percussion effects.

The brilliance of Stephenson's orchestration, alas, proved counterproductive to the needs of a concerto. Or, to put it in other terms, the orchestra was so dominant in this work — not only in scale of sound but in thematic interest — that CSO bass trombone Charles Vernon often seemed peripheral in a work meant to showcase him (it was commissioned for the CSO by the Edward F. Schmidt Family Commissioning Fund).

The long orchestral introduction left no doubt as to where composer Stephenson's interests lay, the work's first two movements amounting to symphonic statements with bass trombone obbligato. Stephenson packed so much thematic, timbral and textural information into these movements that Vernon's statements sounded small by comparison, notwithstanding his technical acuity, resplendent low notes and gorgeous, golden-toned lyricism.

Not until the work's Epilogue did the bass trombone take command of the proceedings. But this section was so radically different from everything that had come before as to suggest a jarring disconnect. So far as musical material was concerned, Stephenson's writing fell somewhere between Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," and John Williams' more overripe movie scores. You could admire the Technicolor character of this writing while wishing it showed more originality.

The evening opened with Gunn nimbly playing Vivaldi's Piccolo Concerto in C Major and also included a warm account of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, foreshadowing next season's complete Beethoven symphonies cycle, which Muti and the orchestra will record.

Muti closed the concert with Gershwin's "An American in Paris," conjuring a more deeply persuasive account of this jazz-inflected masterpiece than one might have expected. The attention Muti gave to details of voicing and dynamics, the tenderness he brought to the blues theme, and the buoyancy and swagger he expressed in the dance sections showed him treating this work as the serious tone poem it is — rather than as a light pops throw-away, as it's often mistakenly regarded.

The program will be repeated through June 15 in Orchestra Hall at Symphony Center, 220 S. Michigan Ave.; ticket prices vary; 312-294-3000 or www.cso.org.

Norridge pair featured on show about mothers and daughters

By TRACY SWARTZ
Chicago Tribune

Norridge resident Kathy Crispino loves rock bands, big hair and rhinestones, and she makes quite an entrance on Sunday's episode of "Smothered." The new TLC network series explores the strong — sometimes eyebrow-raising — bonds that some mothers share with their daughters. Crispino and her 34-year-old daughter, Cristina Bertolli, say they have a "one-of-a-kind relationship" and they are each other's best friends.

"I'm her first call of the day. I'm her last call of the night," Crispino, 60, says on Sunday's episode, which is scheduled to air at 9 p.m. "I see her every morning. We decide what we're going to do for the day. We either meet for breakfast, lunch or dinner, or all of them."

In an interview last week with the Tribune, Bertolli said a friend forwarded her a notice that a production company was looking for mothers and daughters who are close with each other. Crispino said she didn't think they would actually get on the show and "it came so fast that we just kind of went with it." Scenes for the series, which also features three other mother-daughter duos from around the country, were filmed here earlier this year.

There are several cringe-worthy moments on the show. One mother and daughter share the same bathwater and spoon each other in bed. Crispino — who does not live far from Bertolli — admits to hiring a private investigator to follow her daughter because "I have a right to know where you're at."

On Sunday's episode, viewers see how the bond shared by Bertolli and Crispino affects Bertolli's husband, Carlo, and Crispino's other daughter, Carly. The 24-year-old — who is a member of the Wolf Pack, the squad that cheers on the Chicago Wolves at their minor-league hockey games — says on the show that her mom and sister are obsessed with each other and sometimes she feels left out.

But she told the Tribune that she supports their tight relationship and "I live with my mom, so no one is more smothered than me by my mother." Crispino, though, says there is nothing unhealthy about her mothering style.

"People want to see their husbands every day, why wouldn't they want to see their kids every day?" Crispino said. "I don't like the perception that there's something wrong with this. There's nothing wrong with this. There's nothing weird about this. This is how we live. We're just very close, and I don't get why people think it's so weird for mothers to be so close with their daughters. I would hope people would get from (the show) that it's not that crazy. It's maybe how it should be."

Western lowland gorilla Bana at the Regenstein Center for African Apes at the Lincoln Park Zoo has given birth to a healthy infant.

Second baby gorilla born at Lincoln Park Zoo in a month

By STEVE JOHNSON
Chicago Tribune

A second baby gorilla has been born at Chicago's Lincoln Park Zoo, the institution announced this week.

The June 12 birth of a baby of undetermined sex appears to be going well, with the baby nursing and staying close to its mother and the mother behaving appropriately, zoo officials said.

The unnamed baby, born to 24-year-old experienced mother Bana and 30-year-old Kwan, the family group's silverback, came exactly one month after a male, still unnamed, was born to Kwan and Rollie.

Having two new offspring at once should be special for the troop of nine western lowland gorillas, for staff and for zoo visitors, said Curator of Primate Jill Moyses.

"The infants will have the opportunity to grow, develop, and explore their surroundings together and learn from one another," Moyses said in a statement.

The last gorilla birth at the zoo before this year came when the female Bella arrived in 2015. She is now a juvenile member of the troop.

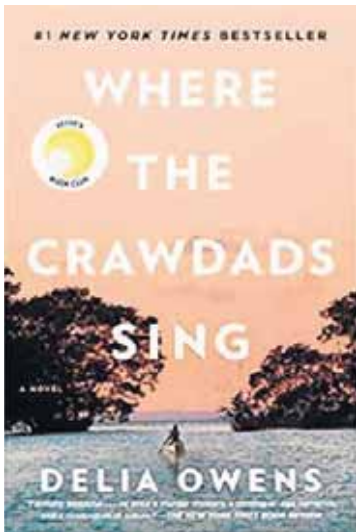

The breeding was initiated on the recommendation of the inter-zoo Species Survival Plan that manages the captive population of western lowland gorillas (a species whose Latin name, it must always be mentioned, is gorilla gorilla gorilla).

Bridesmaid fears she ruined wedding

Dear Amy: My best friend and I have been drifting apart, due to conflicting schedules, but we still always tried to make time for each other.

Last year she asked me to be maid of honor for her wedding. I was flattered and very nervous, as I have severe social anxiety.

Eventually, she “demoted” me to bridesmaid and had another person step in. I was actually relieved.

When the day finally came, I had a major panic attack right before we walked down the aisle. I was very unsteady, and the groomsman basically held me up and was very kind as we walked up the aisle.

However, when he finally had to let me go so we could each go to our place, I tripped over my foot and fell. I was mortified, but I got back up.

After the ceremony, I burst out in tears to the maid of honor. I felt I had ruined the wedding. She was very kind and offered comfort. I calmed down and everything seemed fine the rest of the night.

Fast forward eight months, and I have not heard a word from the bride. I apologized profusely for what I did — and nothing. I have to assume that this has to do with her wedding because I have no idea what else it may be.

What do I do?
— The Banished Bridesmaid

Dear Banished: I am happy that you were surrounded by comfort and kindness during your frightening anxiety attack.

Here’s a question: Did Jennifer Lawrence tripping on her way up the stairs to pick up her Oscar ruin the ceremony? (No.)

Of course you didn’t ruin this wedding.

However, your reaction after the fact might have inflated your role in your friend’s big day.

When you apologized for “ruining” this wedding, you were saying two things: “Your wedding was ruined. The headline of your wedding — the most important thing that happened — was me falling.”

Neither is true. Both statements seem to make the day about you.

I hope you talk to a therapist about your social anxiety. You may be able to learn ways to head off an attack. Contact the bride down the road when you’ve achieved some perspective.

Dear Amy: Why is it considered appropriate to take photos of people any time and at any place — and use them how you wish?

I’ve had my picture taken in classes, at seminars and conventions, at parties, at family gatherings, and even at worship, always by surprise and never after being asked for permission.

When I ask the photographer to move on, they seem surprised and offended and act as if I’m being a rude wet blanket.

They are interrupting our activities, breaking into our conversation and concentration, and assuming that we are agreeing to have our privacy violated.

I wouldn’t mind being asked to be part of a posed group photo, so I could decline politely, if I chose.

As it is, it seems as if participating in any kind of group activity means that your picture could be published and circulated anywhere without your knowledge or permission.

Is there any subtle and graceful way to deter these shutterbugs?
— Camera Shy

Dear Shy: It is possible — when you sign up for a seminar or buy tickets for an event — you are tacitly agreeing to have your photo taken and used.

Some organizations embed language into their contractual boilerplate that says purchasing a ticket (or clicking “agree”) is also agreeing to have your photo taken and shared.

Otherwise, I don’t think you should search for subtle or graceful ways to deter people from taking your picture. You should simply say, “Please don’t take my picture.”

Dear Amy: I was distressed by your anti-Semitic answer to “Disgusted Husband,” who was refusing to attend an orthodox bar mitzvah ceremony because he thought it was “sexist?”

Shame on you.
— Also Disgusted

Dear Disgusted: In my answer, I pointed out that many conservative faith practices (including conservative Christian denominations) are sexist “in structure, if not on the surface.” I also pointed out that anyone has the right to practice their religion any way they choose, and that if “Disgusted” didn’t like it, he should stay home.

14 Chicagoans received $50K to make a difference

Here’s what each plans to do with the unexpected gift

By DARCEL ROCKETT
Chicago Tribune

Fictional best friends Leila and Patricia’s beautiful story about navigating life and friendship as 20-something Chicagoans could easily have faded into an internet abyss.

But local streaming service Open Television (OTV) gives indie work such as “Brown Girls” — that feature people of color, usually short on air time — a voice.

Sam Bailey and Fatimah Asghar’s web series is one of dozens of comedic and dramatic projects aided by the distribution and development company.

“I started the project to solve this issue: Why, if we can watch an artist’s work online from anywhere, does an artist have to go to LA to work in television?” said Aymar Jean Christian, OTV founder and assistant professor of communication studies at Northwestern University.

The Chicago-based OTV launched in 2015 and on Wednesday received a huge financial boost. The Field Foundation awarded Christian $50,000 — $25,000 for him personally and $25,000 for his company.

The organization awarded $700,000 total to the 14 recipients of its “Leaders for a New Chicago” award. The initiative, part of more than $2 million invested by The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, is meant to expand the definition of “leadership” in the city.

“The way that social impact organizes itself these days isn’t always in a nonprofit structure,” said Angelique Power, president of the Field Foundation. “Often it’s individuals who are doing amazing work — organizers, it’s journalists, storytellers, artists, it’s collectives and it’s business.

“With this list of 14,

JAMIE KELTER DAVIS/ALLY ALMORE/ADAM SINGS IN THE TIMBER
The Field Foundation named 14 winners of its inaugural “Leaders for a New Chicago” award. The winners each received $25,000 individually and another $25,000 for their organizations. Winners include, from left, Viveka Ray-Mazumder, Aymar Jean Christian and Heather Miller.

we’re actually funneling resources to powerful visionaries that are making incredible change in our communities across Chicago.”

Power said she was familiar with about half of the leaders through their efforts; the other half she has admired from afar.

Winners were either self-nominated or nominated by someone else.

Viveka Ray-Mazumder, manager of youth advocacy and civics education program KINETIC at Asian Americans Advancing Justice, plans to use the personal $25,000 to pay off debt and put toward savings. As for the organization’s slice of the pie, the Rogers Park resident hopes it will allow the nonprofit to improve language access at the city and state level, continuing what the nonprofit’s youth currently do in schools.

“I really love that Field is willing to invest in organizations and people leading social-change work in our city,” Ray-Mazumder said.

“I really hope this sends a message that social-change work is really important and something to put money behind, but also (that) folks doing that work should be invested in.”

Christian, a Lakeview resident, also plans to pay down debt with the personal award. He said the organization’s share may be used to kick-start OTV’s subscriptions and membership programs so it doesn’t have to rely on grants for funding.

“That will be a big game-changer for us,” he said.

“We’re honored that the Field Foundation and the MacArthur Foundation are trying to level the playing field for young artists of color. I think there’s so much potential to build Chicago into the next hub of indie production.

“Intersectional artists are going to really make a wave that is both social and economic change.”

Heather Miller, executive director of the American Indian Center, said the monetary award is “gold” to its staff of seven and will help them pay bills. A portion will also help fund a public art project the center has in partnership with Chicago Public Art Group at the Northwest Portage Walking Museum.

“It’s not sexy work or anything like that, but this is the type of money that really helps us be stable and maintain our self-sufficiency as an organization, so for that I’m super excited,” said Miller. As for the discretionary $25,000, she plans to split it with staff as a one-time bonus to honor the team effort.

“I’m hoping that this award is just more of a humongous wave of recognition to highlight the Native American experience and bring awareness to the amazing and thriving community that we have here in Chicago,” Miller said.

Power said all the recipients are redefining what the city will become.

“We aren’t finding these leaders; they’re already leaders,” she said. “We’re just giving them capital and handing the megaphone over so they can continue to shape the city that we all want to see tomorrow.”

Other recipients include:

- Monica Cosby, leader of participatory defense work at Westside Justice Center, advocate for incarcerated women and post-incarceration rights.
- Luis Gutiérrez, founder of Latinos Progresando, which helps Latino immigrants navigate the U.S. immigration system.
- Darryl Holliday, co-founder and News Lab director at City Bureau, a civic newsroom on the South Side.
- Tonika Lewis Johnson, visual artist and photographer whose work explores urban segregation.
- Page May, co-founder of Assata’s Daughters, where black youth learn political education from black women and gender non-conforming people.
- Emmanuel Pratt, co-founder and executive director of Sweet Water Foundation, which transforms vacant spaces and abandoned buildings in Englewood and Washington Park into farms, gardens and workshops.

- Analia Rodriguez, executive director of Latino Union of Chicago and advocate for immigrant, labor and women’s rights.
- Sarah Ross, founder and co-director of Prison + Neighborhood Arts Project, which collaborates with incarcerated artists and writers.
- Imelda Salazar, leader and organizer with the Southwest Organizing Project.
- Carlos Tortolero, founder and president of the National Museum of Mexican Art, which drives conversations through art exhibitions.
- J. Gibrán Villalobos, partnership and engagement liaison with the Museum of Contemporary Art, focused on developing relationships with community-based organizations and artists.

Cornelius Smith Jr. and Heather Hemmens

“Love, Take Two” (8 p.m., Hallmark): TV executive Lily Bellenger (Heather Hemmens) returns to her hometown to film an episode of her hit wedding reality show and almost immediately runs into Scott (Cornelius Smith Jr.), her erstwhile college sweetheart. Their chemistry is still there. Unfortunately, Scott’s in the episode because he’s about to get married to someone else in this new romance.

“The Hate U Give” (7 p.m., 10:35 p.m., HBO): George Tillman’s 2018 adaptation of Angie Thomas’ novel stars Amandla Stenberg in a widely praised performance as Starr Carter, an African-American teenager who lives in a predominantly black neighborhood but attends Whitman Prep, a private school. Starr faces a crisis after seeing her best friend fatally shot by a white cop. Regina Hall also stars.

“Tempting Fate” (7 p.m., 11:01 p.m., Lifetime): Adapted from a best-selling novel by Jane Green, this 2019 drama stars Alyssa Milano (“Charmed”) as a happily married mother of two whose life with her devoted husband is upended when she meets a handsome younger man who inexplicably ignites a passion inside her. Steve Kazee (“Shameless”) and Zane Holtz (“From Dusk Till Dawn: The Series”) co-star.

“The Front Runner” (7 p.m., Starz): Hugh Jackman stars as U.S. politician Gary Hart in Jason Reitman’s 2018 political drama, which chronicles Hart’s unsuccessful 1988 presidential bid. Vera Farmiga co-stars.

“All That” (7:30 p.m., 11:10 p.m., Nickelodeon): Longtime “Saturday Night Live” performer Kenan Thompson is an executive producer on this new reboot of the kids’ sketch comedy series that first made him a star in its 1994-2005 Nickelodeon incarnation. This new revival features an entirely new cast of young performers, abetted by guest appearances from original cast members. In the premiere, Kel Mitchell, Lori Beth Denberg and Josh Server appear; The Jonas Brothers perform.

“Death in the Bayou: The Jennings 8” (9 p.m., 12 a.m., ID): This new true-crime series, which launches tonight as two back-to-back episodes, chronicles a lurid series of events that starts in 2005, when the body of a 28-year-old woman is found in a rural Louisiana canal. Over the next four years, seven more bodies are found. To date, no one formally has been charged and investigations continue.

Norwegian star Geir Helgemo, one of the world's best, was South, in today's deal. The best route to 10 tricks would be to ruff a diamond in dummy, but the excellent opening trump lead prevented that.

Second choice was to set up a long spade in dummy, needing a 4-3 spade split. Helgemo went after this by winning East's queen of hearts with the ace at trick one, cashing two top spades in dummy, and leading a third spade. When East discarded a club on the third spade, Helgemo ruffed and led the jack of hearts.

East won and led a heart to dummy's nine as West discarded the king of diamonds. This was the position:

North		East

♦ A 2	♣ 10 7 2	♦ Q J 9 5 4 3	♣ 8
South
♠ Void	♦ 10
♦ 8 7	♣ AK 6 5

Helgemo now made the elegant play of leading the two of diamonds from dummy! East won with his jack. A club from East would see Helgemo duck, end-playing West, so East led a diamond to dummy's ace. West had to shed a spade. A spade ruff, establishing dummy's 10, and a low club now finished West. He had to win and lead another club, giving dummy an entry for the established spade. A beauty!

Late-inning relievers are getting job done

Bummer: ‘The entire bullpen is throwing the ball extremely well’

By LAMOND POPE
Post-Tribune

The White Sox held a one-run lead late Thursday against the Yankees.

Aaron Bummer assumed closer Alex Colome would get the call for the ninth inning.

Sox manager Rick Renteria had other plans.

Colome received an extra day of rest after pitching 1 $\frac{2}{3}$ innings on Tuesday against the Nationals. So the Sox turned to Bummer to get the final three outs.

“I said, ‘Let’s go,’” Bummer said of the opportunity. “It’s a really good feeling. It’s pretty cool.”

After allowing a one-out single, Bummer struck out the final two batters for the first save of his career.

Bummer has been one of the steady members of the Sox bullpen. That list also includes Colome and Evan Marshall. And Kelvin Herrera is showing signs of rebounding after a rocky May.

“It comes with your preparation,” Bummer said. “(Catchers James) McCann and (Welington Castillo) do really good jobs (with) scouting reports. They (enable) us to pitch with our strengths, so we trust what those guys are putting down. We throw those pitches where they are supposed to go, chances are we are going to be successful.

“The entire bullpen is throwing the ball extremely well. It’s a lot of fun to be down there. Hopefully we can continue to build.”

Bummer entered Friday with a 1.37 ERA. He has allowed three earned runs in 19 $\frac{2}{3}$ innings.

Colome has converted all 14 of his save attempts and has a 2.39 ERA.

Marshall has not allowed an earned run in 16 $\frac{1}{3}$ innings.

“Colome sets the tone,” Marshall said. “He goes out there,

Boos for? Yu?

Darvish is regaining his confidence. Is he ready to sway Dodger Stadium doubters?

By MARK GONZALES | Chicago Tribune

LOS ANGELES — Yu Darvish wasn’t sure what kind of reception he should expect Saturday night when he pitches at Dodger Stadium for the first time since his 2017 World Series debacle.

“I don’t know,” Darvish said. “Maybe boo.”

Yu?

“Boo.”

At least at this point, Darvish isn’t hyping his return to Dodger Stadium with the same lofty expectations he placed on himself on May 20 after referring to former Cubs pitcher Jake Arrieta as a “legend.” Darvish pitched six innings of four-hit ball against the Phillies and Arrieta, the 2015 National League Cy Young Award winner with the Cubs.

“It’s the same game as usual,” Darvish said. “I just want to do my job. That’s it.”

Saturday’s game might be more emotional for the Dodgers fans who blame Darvish for his early knockouts in Games 3 and 7 of the World Series, forgetting his exceptional performances in wins over the Diamondbacks and Cubs in the 2017 playoffs.

Although Darvish knows the Dodgers offense is formidable, he also has the confidence that wasn’t present when he last visited Dodger Stadium 12 months

If you’re wondering what the player with one of the NFL’s hottest-selling jerseys thinks about the Bears new 1936-inspired throwback uniform, Khalil Mack offered a brief but positive review at Halas Hall.

“Those joints (are) wet,” Mack said. “Those joints (are) wavy.”

That’s a thumbs-up from the star pass rusher. And it’s a good thing. If last weekend’s Bears100 Celebration in Rosemont was any indication, those white No. 52 jerseys with the navy and orange stripes on the sleeves and shoulders are going to be everywhere at Soldier Field this fall.

U.S. OPEN

Rose puts himself in ‘perfect’ position

Despite hiccups, he’s right where he wants to be after finishing his round in lead

By DOUG FERGUSON
Associated Press

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Justin Rose wasn’t too bothered by two poor swings that slowed his momentum Friday in the U.S. Open. He had too many great par saves that kept him atop the leaderboard when he finished his second round at Pebble Beach.

Rose, leading by as many as four shots among the early starters, had to settle for a 1-under 70 that sends him into the weekend in good shape to pursue another U.S. Open. He was two shots ahead of Aaron Wise, who had an equal share of good and bad for a 71.

Tiger Woods was seven shots behind, and it felt like more.

Woods made a birdie on his second hole, and then missed everything else the rest of the day. Outside of his lone birdie from 10 feet on No. 11, he didn’t make a putt longer than 5 feet.

Two-time defending champion Brooks Koepka started slowly and finished with two late birdies for another 69. He was three shots behind in his bid to match a 114-year record with a third straight U.S. Open title.

Rose was at 7-under 135 as Rory McIlroy, Rickie Fowler and others played in the afternoon.

“At this point, there’s not a lot to worry about,” Rose said. “If you’re one ahead, one behind, it’s a lot of golf to be played. But it’s the perfect spot after two days.”

For a short time, it looked as though it might be even better.

Conditions were roughly the same as the first round, with very little wind and cool clouds so thick that condensation felt like a light mist. Rose started slowly, even dropped his putter when a 12-foot birdie chance brazed the edge of the cup, his fifth straight par to start the round.

He reached 8 under for the tournament with a bold 7-iron into 3 feet for birdie on the par-4 second. He was four shots ahead, and his tee shot on No. 3 left him just 85 yards away from a front pin. And that’s when it turned.

Rose came up short of the green and had to scramble for par. Then, he was torn between driver or an iron off the fourth tee, never got settled and hit his iron over the edge of the cliff and into the ice plant.

That led to bogey, and it was all pars the rest of the way.

“I felt like the third hole, I lost a bit of momentum,” Rose said. “Great opportunity there. Was definitely a birdie opportunity, and then laid up in the hazard on No. 4. A bit of lapse of concentration there.”

But he didn’t overlook the good, and there was plenty of that, especially for par. The biggest two were his final two holes, when Rose got up-and-down from choppy rough short of the eighth green, and a 50-foot lag up the slope on the ninth green to end on a good note.

“I made up one shot on the lead,” Jordan Spieth said after his seven-birdie round of 69. “It felt like more, but Rosey, that’s the best I’ve seen somebody get up-and-down around the golf course for two rounds, maybe ever.”

That’s high praise from Spieth, who has had his share of short-game exhibitions.

Spieth had a remarkable bogey for the second straight day. After hitting over the cliff and into the ocean on No. 8 and then saving par from deep rough behind the green in the opening round, he was in real trouble at the par-4 second. From a fairway bunker, his ball hit a rake that wasn’t seen in the high grass. It bounced in the air and was buried in grass so thick Spieth could only hack out.

From 162 yards, he hit to 8 feet and made the putt to escape with bogey.

Koepka, meanwhile, was lurking. He was even for his round until reaching the front of the green on the par-5 sixth for a two-putt birdie, and then he went after a back pin on the 109-yard seventh hole for a 4-foot birdie.

“I feel great. I’m excited. I’ve got a chance. That’s all you can ask for,” Koepka said. “I just need to make a few putts. Sometimes the hole just needs to open up. If I can get off to a good start tomorrow, have that feeling where the hole’s opening up, it could be a fun round.”

Woods didn’t look as though he made much fun at all.

He talked about leaving the ball above the hole all round, though it really was the last two holes that irritated him so much. Five shots behind, just where he started, he closed with two bogeys for a 72. Woods came up short on the par-4 18th and hit a flop shot to about 20 feet, leading to bogey. He had a chance to save par after a drive into the bunker on No. 9, only to miss that.

“Not a very good finish,” he said.

‘We’re in new territory now’

Career-altering injuries to Thompson, Durant put Warriors’ future in doubt

By JANIE MCCAULEY
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Steve Kerr still considers the Warriors an ideal fit for Kevin Durant.

Whether Durant sees it that way going into free agency next month, Kerr isn’t about to guess. Especially now that the two-time NBA Finals MVP is headed for what could be a yearlong recovery from surgery for a ruptured right Achilles tendon.

“Well, the injury kind of throws everything for a loop, so I have no idea what Kevin’s going to do,” Kerr said Friday. “I know that we all want him back, and we think this is a great situation for him and vice versa. So, hopefully we get him back and keep this thing going with the understanding that he’s a free agent and we want what’s best for him, and he’s free to make any choice he wants. Hopefully he’s back, and we will all give him any advice, any counsel that he needs. And ultimately he’s going to make his own decision. He’s earned that.”

A day after losing Game 6 of the Finals to the champion Toronto Raptors, Kerr and general manager Bob Myers braced for an uncertain summer while still trying to cope with the heartbreak of seeing Durant go down in Game 5. Then Klay Thompson tore the ACL in his left knee during the third quarter of Thursday night’s 114-110 loss in the final game at Oracle Arena.

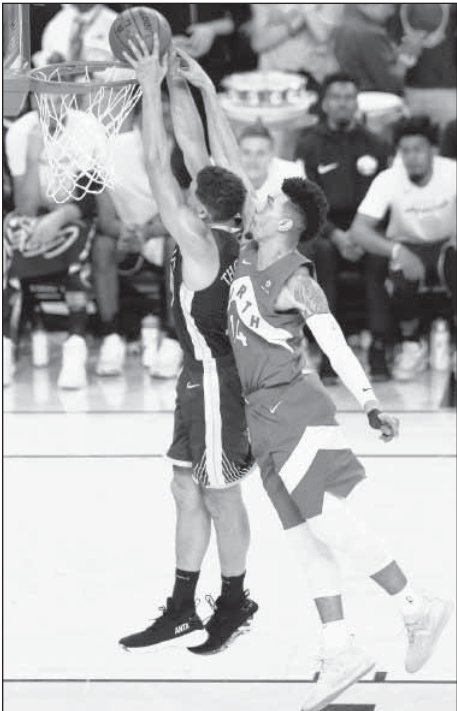

“This year more than any other tested the fabric of our team,” Myers said. “This year I might have been the proudest of our resolve. I don’t know if that’s evident. I hear that from people in the Bay Area, the support we’ve gotten, the things people say about kind of conducting ourselves as champions. That stuff matters. Winning matters, too, obviously. It all matters. Try to continue to hang on to that culture.”

In February, Durant became frustrated over all the fuss and speculation about where he might play next season, and said, “I’m trying to play basketball.” He signed a two-year contract last summer that includes a player option for 2019-20, so Durant can become a free agent to pursue a maximum five-year deal. The Warriors are expected to try to sign both Durant and Thompson to those max contracts.

Asked how optimistic he is about bringing back Durant, an emotionally exhausted Myers said, simply, “I don’t know” while noting of free agency: “It’s never what you think.”

All season, the Warriors were determined to cherish this ride together knowing the roster could look far different once training camp rolls around in September — along with the venue as the team moves across the bay to the new Chase Center in San Francisco. Golden State’s players also insist they have never taken for granted the special five-year run featuring three championships and five consecutive NBA Finals berths.

“In the history of this NBA you could highlight every team that was supposed to win or had the best team and all the different storylines. And 82 games and a full playoff run, a lot can happen,” Stephen Curry said. “It’s just a matter of how much you fight and just leave it all out there on the floor. I think the way that we have talked and described this journey, I don’t think there’s ever been a situation where we have taken anything for granted. And that’s something I can look back and just hold.”

Thompson’s knee surgery has not yet been set. Kerr doesn’t expect to ever see two injuries this severe in consecutive finals games again.

He was still stunned a day later, and Myers, too.

“You’re talking about two career-altering injuries to two of your best players in back-to-back finals games. Unheard of. It will probably never happen again,” Kerr said. “We’re in new territory now.”

ASK THE REPORTER

JIMMY GREENFIELD

Please explain to me why Bowen Byram isn’t a slam dunk for the Black-hawks at No. 3? I know they have good young defensive prospects that are left-handed. But if they all develop, just trade one for a gold mine down the road. Also, I’m curious about the goaltending situation after next season. Corey Crawford’s contract is up after this season. They signed Colin Delia to a team-friendly deal, but I’m not convinced he is a long-term answer. — Jonathan S.

I can’t tell you Byram isn’t a slam dunk because nobody knows what the Hawks are thinking yet. For all we know, he’s their guy and the Hawks are just doing their due diligence on everybody else in case of an unfortunate injury before the draft or a trade they can’t pass up pre-sents itself.

What I can tell you is that the Hawks have insisted — and I have no reason to doubt them — that they will take Byram if they feel he has the best long-term NHL future, regardless of the position he plays. Keep in mind that not all of the Hawks’ young defensive prospects — Adam Boqvist, Nicolas Beaudin, Ian Mitchell and Henri Jokiharju — are likely to turn into viable NHL defensemen. Could they all develop and play for the Hawks one day? Sure. But there’s no chance they’ll all be on the same timetable to arrive and succeed in the NHL.

More than likely, at least one will not live up to expectations or will need far more seasoning than the others. Look how long it took Erik Gustafsson to become a full-time player in the NHL. Even Duncan Keith spent two full seasons in the AHL before cracking the Hawks roster.

Getting back to Bryam, it appears he’s a future No. 1 NHL defenseman with an all-around skill set that’s superior to Boqvist. My sense based on how much the Hawks have talked about defense the last two to three years is that he’ll be hard to pass up. But we just don’t know how they feel about Alex Turcotte, Dylan Cozens, Vasilii Podkolzin or even Cole Caulfield.

During my interview with Stan Bowman last week, I asked him if there was any straying from the “best player available” philosophy. Here’s what he told me:

“No. And the one correction I would make because I hear this said a lot — the best player — that assumes there is just one and everyone else is not the best player. There might be multiple great players. You’re trying to pick the one who you project the one to be the best fit for your team going forward. Because when you say the best that assumes that there’s an answer.”

So whomever the Hawks take, it’s important to realize that doesn’t mean they think their pick is significantly better than the players they didn’t take. There is no slam dunk at No. 3 this year.

Regarding the goaltending situation for 2020-21, that’s too far away to really know what’s going to happen. Delia still has a lot to prove before the Hawks anoint him their starting goalie.

For one thing, Crawford could very well come back on a cheaper short-term deal after next season. Kevin Lankinen, who won a world championship with Finland last month, can’t be ruled out to even win the backup job for this season.

prepares and does his job every day. (Colome) and Herrera, these are elite right-handed relievers."

Herrera has a 6.58 ERA but has produced scoreless outings in four of his five June appearances. He surrendered five runs in two-thirds of an inning against the Red Sox on May 5 and left the game with lower-back stiffness.

Herrera had a 17.18 ERA in nine May appearances as he worked his way back. He has a 2.08 ERA in five June outings.

"Every time he's gone out (recently), he's gotten better," Renteria said. "It shows you perseverance. He's been there, he's done it before."

"There's no doubt he's going to continue to have the success that he's having right now as we move forward."

Herrera had three strikeouts in a scoreless eighth Thursday.

"I felt pretty good," Herrera said. "I was able to keep the lead and hand it to Bummer and I felt pretty good about it."

Bummer said he didn't feel any additional nerves in the closing opportunity.

"As soon as you get out there, it's doing your job," Bummer said. "It's the same outs as getting it in the sixth. It's still three outs. You go out and do your job. I just happened to finish the game. No time to be nervous. Just go out and do my job."

Renteria saw several benefits with how Thursday played out.

"What happened helped everybody," Renteria said. "You build yourself confidence in terms of the situation you are provided to perform. And in terms of Alex, giving him that little respite. Even though we had the day off the previous day, we had pushed him to the limit the previous night."

"These guys all picked him up and did what they needed to do. Just staying within themselves and executing and trusting what they had. It was a big thing, not only for Alex but for all of us."

WHITE SOX NOTES

Covey's sore shoulder feeling better

BY LAMOND POPE

Post-Tribune

White Sox starting pitcher Dylan Covey went on the injured list June 6 with right shoulder inflammation.

Covey played catch Friday and expects to throw off the mound Saturday.

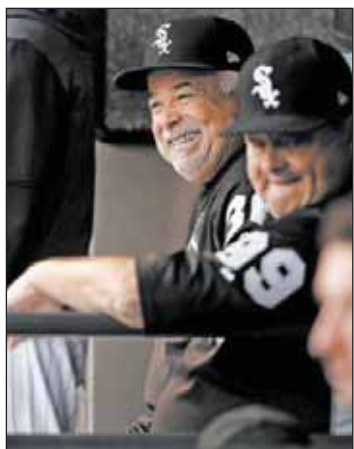

"That will be a good indicator of where I'm at," Covey said. "And we'll go from there."

Covey said he had been managing the situation for a while before heading to the injured list.

"It's something I've been trying to deal with for a good portion of the season," Covey said. "We had a routine, had a schedule and we were able to get it ready every fifth day to make that start."

"Coming off the (May 31) start against Cleveland and going into the (June 5) start against the Nationals, it was a little bit more sore than usual. I wasn't recovering quite as quickly. Even with an off day in there, I felt OK on the fifth day when I pitched in Washington, but I felt at that point it was affecting my performance."

Covey allowed two runs and seven hits in five innings against the Nationals.

Covey is 1-4 with a 4.58 ERA. He has appeared in nine games and has made seven starts. He has 22 strikeouts in 37 1/3 innings pitched. He's holding opponents to a .238 average.

Covey said he's making progress.

"I feel much better now," Covey said. "I've had a few days off. We're taking it day by day."

In more injury news, the Sox announced pitching prospect Jimmy Lambert is suffering from a strained right forearm. Lambert has not pitched since June 3. He will be re-evaluated in the coming weeks.

Lambert is 3-4 with a 4.55 ERA in 11 games for Double-A Birmingham. He was a fifth-round pick in the 2016 draft out of Fresno State.

Starters set: Sox manager Rick Renteria announced the starters for the two games against the Cubs next week at Wrigley Field.

Ivan Nova will pitch Tuesday and Lucas Giolito will start Wednesday.

Moncada continues to recover: Third baseman Yoan Moncada did not start for the third straight game as he recovers from upper-back tightness. Renteria is hopeful Moncada will return Saturday or Sunday. Moncada suffered the injury Monday.

Draft signings: The Sox agreed to terms with 29 of their 40 picks from the 2019 draft. The list includes players selected in Rounds 4 through 10.

Bryant 'didn't know' Sox series is coming

BY MARK GONZALES

Chicago Tribune

LOS ANGELES — Cubs slugger Kris Bryant roomed with White Sox pitcher Dylan Covey for three seasons at the University of San Diego and calls Covey "one of my favorite people."

But Bryant has a vastly different view than Covey of the Cubs-White Sox series that starts Tuesday night with the first of two games at Wrigley Field.

In fact, Bryant was amused to read a tweet Friday by Scott Merkin of MLB.com that quoted Covey as saying, "We definitely want to beat (the Cubs), no doubt, every single time."

"I love Dylan," Bryant said with a smile before the Cubs prepared to play Dodgers on Friday. "I didn't even know we play them. I just focus on what we've got today. Now I know. That's funny."

Bryant said he'd rather not know about his future opponents and opposing starting pitchers because "it takes away from what we're doing now."

"I don't think we pick any series to look forward to or not look forward to," Bryant said. "It's all the same to us. Just go where the plane goes and we're there. That's how we approach it. That's how we have to."

Bryant plans to send a text message to Covey in hopes of spending Monday's day off together.

"There are no hard feelings," Bryant said. "I love my buddy Dylan."

Kimbrel to Iowa soon: Craig Kimbrel is scheduled to pitch his second round of live batting practice Saturday in Mesa, Ariz.

If Kimbrel, who agreed to a three-year, $43 million contract on June 5, passes all tests, he could start a minor-league rehab assignment at Triple-A Iowa.

Not-so-crazy eighth spot:

Maddon used a pitcher to bat in the eighth spot for the sixth consecutive game, and he doesn't seem inclined to change that placement soon.

"I'm really liking it," Maddon said. "It's really popped in a lot of good ways."

The recent production of infielder David Bote in the ninth spot, along with Kyle Schwarber and Kris Bryant at the top of the order, has enabled the offense to function well, Maddon said.

"I like the idea of pinch-hitting for the pitchers sooner," Maddon said. "I like the idea of clearing the pitcher sooner, and the fact you can feed the 1-2 hitters better in the National League."

"When I do this, I realize how much I like and appreciate it more than when I get away from it. We're experimenting both ways, but I like this way."

Extra innings: Starters Jon Lester (foot) and Cole Hamels (ankle) and reliever Steve Cishek (knee) have recovered from their minor ailments, Maddon said. ... Double-A Tennessee pitcher Tyson Miller was named the Cubs' midseason player of the year by Baseball America. Miller, 24, a 6-foot-4 right-hander who was selected in the fourth round of the 2016 draft out of Cal Baptist in Riverside, Calif., has a 2.51 ERA in 13 starts and has struck out 70 and allowed only 15 walks in 75 1/3 innings.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cubs pitcher Yu Darvish is hoping for a happy return to Dodger Stadium as he pitches against his former team for the first time on Saturday.

Darvish to face Dodgers

ago. Darvish's 2018 season reached a low point when his bullpen session was halted because of lingering discomfort in his right elbow that led to season-ending surgery 2 1/2 months later.

"Last year, I couldn't even play catch last year here," Darvish recalled.

This season Darvish has shown flashes of dominance, reminders of why the Cubs signed him to a six-year, $126 million contract in February of 2018.

Darvish hasn't walked more than three batters in a game since May 9, his slider and cut fastball have locked up right- and left-handed hitters, and the command of his fastball has improved to the point where he threw 63 of 83 pitches for strikes in his last start Monday against the Rockies.

Those stepping stones showed the confidence Darvish showed shortly after signing with the Cubs, when he sent a text to Dodgers manager Dave Roberts with the message, "see you in October."

"If you want to go to the World Series, you have to face the Dodgers," Darvish said.

Darvish's road ERA of 4.04 is considerably better than his 5.89 home ERA. But manager Joe Maddon believes Darvish passed a big test at Wrigley Field when he didn't allow a run in his five innings against the Phillies and returning hero Arrieta.

"And the fact he talked about Jake and had to face Jake head-to-head and overcame that," Maddon said. "He's been pitching well. I think he's going to come out with a different mindset. A lot of that is going to be in his rearview mirror."

He'll admit there are still hurdles for him to get over. I get that. But he's better at putting things in his rearview mirror. More recently. If he continues along that way and throws the ball like he has, good stuff is right around the corner.

"Physically he's been great. His last start his fastball command was the best since I've seen him. And his stuff is good. So he's going to turn the corner and get a couple breaks here and there that he's going to finish games. I don't mean nine innings, but finish and win. And I think he's in a good place. I like how he's talking."

During his three months with the Dodgers, Darvish said he was exposed to analytics for the first time and studied the numbers.

"Sometimes it helps," Darvish said after a long pause. "Sometimes not. So now I don't want to see the numbers a lot, just a little bit."

Darvish's Dodgers tenure ended on a sour note as he went 0-2 against the Astros in the 2017 World Series, allowing nine runs, eight earned, in only 3 1/3 innings over two starts.

But it wasn't all negative. He said he appreciated the feedback he received from Dodgers three-time NL Cy Young Award winner Clayton Kershaw. Kershaw allowed home runs to Kyle Schwarber and Kris Bryant on Thursday but overcame a 3-0 deficit to earn a 7-3 win over the Cubs.

"I looked at him as perfect," Darvish said. "Some days he has a bad day too. I'm always thinking I have to be perfect. But he has a bad day too. And he's a good teammate."

RANKING THE BEST BEARS PLAYERS EVER

#83 Zuck Carlson

Left guard became a fixture on one of the best offensive lines in team history

By WILL LARKIN | Chicago Tribune

From 1932 to 1934 the Bears went on one of the best runs in franchise history.

They went 20-3-7 and played for the NFL championship in all three years, winning the title in 1932 and '33 and finishing as runner-up in 1934.

The offensive line was one of those teams' biggest strengths. Jules "Zuck" Carlson was a fixture at left guard.

That group of five linemen combined for eight first-team and five second-team All-Pro honors. By comparison, the 1980s line that most consider the Bears' best — Jimbo Covert, Mark Bortz, Jay Hilgenberg, Tom Thayer and Keith Van Horne — combined for four first-team nods and one second-team. The great teams of the early 1940s also had excellent lines.

The 1934 Bears outscored their regular-season opponents 286-86 while outgaining them 3,802 yards to 2,213 overall and 2,847 to 1,407 on the ground as Feathers became the league's first 1,000-yard rusher.

Carlson was a first-team All-Pro in 1932 and a second-teamer the next two years. In addition to his excellent blocking, he was known for his knack for blocking punts.

After a 27-14 win against the Packers on Oct. 28, 1934, the Tribune's George Strickler singled out the left side of the Bears line in his game story: "Bill Hewitt, Link Lyman and Zuck Carlson were tearing open wide holes in the right side of the Green Bay line as the Bears piled up 311 yards in 53 attempts rushing."

Carlson remained on the team through the 1936 season, when a pair of superb rookies — future Hall of Famers Joe Stydahar and Dan Fortmann — forced their way into the lineup.

While many of his teammates were rough-and-tumble players, Carlson appears to have been one of the squad's more gentlemanly linemen. Sometimes that made him a bit of a sitting duck when opponents went looking for retaliation after a questionable play.

George Trafton, a Hall of Fame center whose career was winding down when Carlson was a rookie, was known as the Bears' hardest hitter.

Trafton told the Tribune's Edward Prell on Jan. 1, 1945: "Bill Owen (of the Giants) was chasing Jules Carlson in the Polo Grounds. Bill didn't see me as he ran by and I hung an elbow on his chin. A couple of buckets of water in his face brought Bill back to life. He started cussing Carlson, thinking Jules had knocked him out."

End Luke Johnsos was teammates with Carlson for all eight years of both players' careers.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE/1935

Left guard Jules "Zuck" Carlson was part of a dominant line that helped the Bears win consecutive NFL championships in 1932 and '33.

He told Arch Ward for his April 22, 1947, "In the Wake of the News" column: "I hooked (Packers lineman Cal Hubbard's) leg as I went by him. Cal spun around and went down. I did it again. He got up and said: 'No rookie treats me like that!' I said 'How do you know it was me, maybe it was Carlson!' On the next play Hubbard lined up against Carlson, took deliberate aim and broke his nose with a hard smash."

Carlson still is a hero in his home state, enshrined in the Oregon State University Athletics Hall of Fame and the Oregon Sports Hall of Fame. After his career with the Bears, he stayed in Chicago, teaching industrial arts at Cooley High School and working as an instructor with the Chicago Steamfitters Union until he retired in 1972. He died in 1986 at 81 in Park Ridge.

Bears finalize contract with top pick Montgomery

Running back from Iowa State signs his four-year rookie deal

By RICH CAMPBELL | Chicago Tribune

David Montgomery signed his four-year rookie contract Friday, a procedural but important formality for the Bears as they head into their five-week summer break.

The Bears traded up 14 spots in the third round to select the former Iowa State running back with the No. 73 pick in April. Montgomery rushed for 2,362 yards and 24 touchdowns over his last two seasons for the Cyclones.

Montgomery impressed coach Matt Nagy during spring practices with his competitiveness and drive.

"He wants to be perfect on every single play, so he's going to practice the way he plays, and he's making plays," Nagy said Wednesday.

"We always knew he had great hands. You don't know with these college backs how great of route runners they are, but he's a really good route runner. This kid can't wait, (just like) Mike Davis and these other backs. They want to put the pads on."

Indeed, several of Montgomery's greatest traits — his ability to break tackles and gain yards after contact — won't be evident until preseason games in August when live tackling commences.

But during all the passing plays in spring practices, Montgomery began developing as the versatile, unpredictable offensive weapon the Bears project him to be.

Montgomery's finalized contract Friday conjured memories of the holdout drama that hurt the Bears last summer, although he was never a candidate to hold out because of his draft status and the position he plays.

Linebacker Roquan Smith, the No. 8 pick in 2018, held out for nearly a month and missed all of training camp because of an impasse that centered on contract language governing hits with the helmet and related disciplinary action.

So far the Bears have signed Montgomery, fourth-round receiver Riley Ridley, seventh-round running back Kerrith Whyte and seventh-round cornerback Stephen Denmark to rookie deals. Sixth-round slot cornerback Duke Shelley is their only unsigned rookie.

forms for their 100th season last Friday night. Bears Chairman George McCaskey shared the initial reaction from his 96-year-old mother, Virginia.

"We had to get the approval of the owner of the team to put this project into motion," McCaskey said. "So I showed Mom the artist's rendering. And the first thing out of her mouth — and this is a quote — was 'Well, those socks don't turn me on.'"

Virginia confirmed that sentiment and was then asked whether she remembered the 1936 uniforms.

"I was in my first or second year of high school at that point," she noted. "And I wasn't really paying that much attention to the uniforms. I was more interested in the players who were wearing them."

Fair enough.

Coach Matt Nagy offered his positive take after practice Tuesday.

"How sweet is the helmet?" Nagy said, noting that the navy helmet with the orange-winged stripes reminds him of the one he wore as a college quarterback at Delaware.

Kyle Fuller, who had the honor of being the runway model for the new uniforms at the Bears100 Celebration, offered his praise as well, even with his disagreement with the team owner.

"I like them a lot," Fuller said. "(My favorite part) might be the socks. It's the socks and then the white-on-blue and then I love our 100-year patches too."

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,
Did the drought of 1988 follow an extremely wet spring?
— Annette Kavanaugh

Dear Annette,
It did not. The spring of 1988 was extremely dry and provided conditions for the benchmark hot, drought summer that was to follow. Chicago's three-month March-May meteorological spring precipitation total was just 5.42 inches, more than 4 inches below normal and the city's 11th-driest on record. Precipitation for the June-August meteorological summer totaled 7.08 inches, more than 5 inches below normal and the city's 22nd-driest. That summer, Chicago logged a record 47 days that topped 90 degrees that included a record seven days of triple-digit heat. Nearly half of the Lower 48 was in extreme drought, resulting in devastating crop losses and a price tag estimated between $80 billion and $120 billion.

MIKE CARLSON/GETTY

Cesar Puello of the Angels hits the dirt after being hit by a pitch. With fastball velocity up around the league, being plunked has taken on an extra dimension compared to years past.

It's an increase in hitting that batters don't enjoy

BY DAVE SHEININ
The Washington Post

One striking byproduct of a game increasingly predicated upon power — with 2019 seeing a record-setting pace of both strikeouts and home runs — is the slow disappearance, to the point of near-extinction, of certain events that were once commonplace. For example:

Stolen bases. On a per-game basis, this season has seen the fewest (.94) since 1971.

Sacrifice bunts. This year's rate of .32 per game is the lowest in history.

Singles. 10.5 per game, the fewest in history.

Triples. 0.3 per game, the fewest in history.

Double-plays. 1.39 per game, the fewest since 1968.

The reasons are simple: Fewer balls in play plus a higher value placed on every out (when the next swing might produce another home run) equals a decline in risk and “small ball” strategy.

But curiously, one other classic baseball event keeps growing in frequency, for reasons that beg for exploration: the hit by pitch. Last season saw batters get plunked at the highest rate in the modern era: .79 per game. And this season, the rate has inched even higher: .81 per game. With the sport on pace for 1,975 hit-batsmen in 2019, that's an increase of more than 23% than 30 years ago.

And with fastball velocity at an all-time high of 93.0 mph in 2019, that means the pain-per-plunking ratio is also at its highest.

The increase has made people across the game sit up and take notice, if for no other reason than because batters getting drilled frequently sparks confrontations, beanball wars and brawls. This past week alone saw pitchers for the Colorado Rockies and Chicago Cubs hit eight batters in a three-game series, leaving stars such as Nolan Arenado and Kris Bryant bruised, and Atlanta Braves third baseman Josh Donaldson receive a one-game suspension (which he appealed) after he objected to being grazed by a fastball and confronted Pittsburgh Pirates pitcher Joe Musgrove.

“We get hit a lot,” Cubs manager Joe Maddon told reporters. “I’ve always had a rule among my guys. . . . You’ve got two options. Go to the mound, or go to first base. But don’t sit there and jabber. Make up your mind. Do one or the other.”

So what's with the increase? The simplest explanation has to do with basic math: There are more pitches per plate appearance (3.92) and per game (302.9) this season than ever before, so it stands to reason that more of

MONICA HERNDON/TAMPA BAY TIMES

The Rays' Guillermo Heredia tries to recover after being hit by a pitch. In a changing statistical age for baseball, one of the numbers going up has been batters being hit by pitches.

those pitches would wind up colliding with batters.

But people within the game see other forces at work:

Velocity

Yes, our favorite, catchall root-cause of everything wrong with baseball is quite likely also to blame, at least in part, for the rise in hit-by-pitches. If talent evaluators and front offices are selecting pitchers for velocity as the clear, No. 1 attribute, it makes sense that overall command would suffer across the game.

“You’re getting all these younger guys who throw harder and harder, but without much experience,” said Philadelphia Phillies lefty Pat Neshsek, a veteran of seven teams across 13 big league seasons. “It’s a lot of inexperienced guys out there, just letting it go.”

This is borne out by data separating starters, who are hitting batters this year at a rate of once every 104.5 plate appearances, from relievers, whose rate is one in 83.5 plate appearances — in large part because starters (92.7 mph) don’t throw as hard, on average, as relievers (93.5 mph).

Home runs

With hitters on pace to shatter the record for homers in a season, pitchers are throwing inside more than ever — not so much to “send a message,” although that still happens, but to prevent hitters from getting their arms extended. Leaguewide, pitchers are on pace to throw some 25,000 additional inside pitches than in 2008, when pitch-location tracking data first became available.

“With more homers being hit, you’re going to see guys pitching inside more,” said Baltimore Orioles right-hander Dylan Bundy.

“You’re not trying to necessarily hit a guy, but you’re trying to throw it maybe six inches away from him — to keep him from getting his arms extended — and that’s a small window to throw through.”

The launch-angle movement

With more batters than ever trying consciously to lift the ball in the air, pitchers are noticing more of them standing closer and “diving” across the plate in an effort to cover the outside corners. “You’ll see guys literally fall down on a ball that’s over the plate but high,” Bundy said. “They’re diving out over the plate and falling down, thinking it’s right at their heads.”

Although data isn’t maintained for which body parts are getting hit, at least anecdotally there appears to be a big increase in batters getting drilled on the underside of their back arm, near the triceps — perhaps because the first move of hitters trying to lift the ball is to tuck that back elbow to create a more uppercut swing.

Hitters “are getting closer to home plate,” Washington Nationals manager Davey Martinez said. “Pitchers across the league are trying to establish inside again. Over the years, everything was pitch away, pitch away. Now they’re trying to establish in, and because a hitter is standing close, they’re getting hit more.”

Protective armor

While batters have been wearing elbow and shin guards for decades, the equipment has become more sophisticated, with companies such as 44 Pro Guards designing customized elbow guards that extend over the triceps area. Among the company’s clients is Arizona Diamondbacks outfielder Tim Lincecum, whose 11 HBPs in 84 plate appearances this season makes him something of a hit-by-pitch specialist.

Montreal’s Ron Hunt holds the modern record of 50 HPBs in 1971, but at Lincecum’s current pace, if he reaches 500 plate appearances he’d get plunked 65 times.

“I don’t go up there trying to get hit,” Lincecum told reporters. “But if the opportunity presents itself and the ball is coming in, I’m going to let it hit me.”

As with velocity, strikeouts and home runs, one wonders how high the number of hit-by-pitches in baseball can go. But there is one major difference: With velocity, and to some extent strikeouts and home runs as well, the theoretical maximums are tied up with the limits of human physiology.

With hit-by-pitches, it’s more a matter of pain tolerance.

The greats spin personal narratives like a wedge

By THOMAS BOSWELL
The Washington Post

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — In the early rounds of major tournaments, it’s entertaining — but also instructive — to listen for the golf love stories and the heart-deep personal narratives that come from the mouths of the world’s greatest players.

As much as precision and self-restraint seem to rule play, especially at an exacting event such as the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach Golf Links, there is often, under the surface, a passion play going through the minds of key players. At times, “best interior story” vies with “best golfer” to decide the winner.

Many golfers approach majors clad in a suit of armor-plated reasons they believe they should play well. It’s almost a necessary self-defense against the pressures and bad bounces of such tests. But a few of these self-told victory tales ring true, while many seem like concoctions.

For example, Rickie Fowler thinks that, at 30, he finally can win his first major title. And after shooting a first-round 66 on Thursday morning, he can tell you many reasons his years of frustration may soon come to an end.

However, true to his gentle nature, Fowler immediately follows by saying: “I’d love to get a major. It would be awesome if it was this week. We’re off to a good start. . . . [But] whether I win a major or I don’t in my career, it’s not something that’s going to define me. There’s a lot of other things that I’d love to be remembered by, work off the golf course and making a difference and changing people’s lives. It would be nice to have a major on the résumé. We’ll see what we can do.”

It would be nice? It won’t define me? We’ll see what we can do?

This is, perhaps, not quite the perfect self-narrative, no matter how proud Fowler is that, after years, he finally comes to the first tee in majors with the same calm nerves and clear thinking that he would bring to a generic PGA Tour event.

In contrast, Brooks Koepka, more than a year younger than Fowler, can tell you why he knows that he can win his fifth major this week — all in the past 25 months. Each major triumph has brought him more self-knowledge and self-confidence. His victory in last month’s PGA Championship showed him that, faced with a collapse, he could “reset” his entire golf nervous system on the fly.

“I watched a six-shot lead disappear very quickly,” said Koepka, who made four straight ugly bogeys on that final back nine at Bethpage Black. “Walking to that 15th tee, you could be very upset. I could have pouted about it. I could have done a million different things. But instead, just turned that into — ‘I’ve still got a one-shot lead. [Dustin Johnson] has to make something happen if he wants to catch me.’

“I was actually really proud of myself the way I spun that mentally — turned that into ‘I’ve got to go out and go do something.’ Hit great shots coming down the stretch, especially when I needed to.”

Koepka, who is trying to become the first player to win three straight U.S. Opens, started fast Thursday, making a birdie on four of his first six holes.

A player who comes to a U.S. Open without a story to tell himself about why he will succeed is almost playing naked. Of course, the closer that story is to the truth, the warmer the psychological clothes.

Few sound more convincing than Jon Rahm, No. 13 in the world, who opened with a 69. “When I grew up in northern Spain, it’s very similar coastline and very similar golf courses to California. I feel comfortable,” he said. “Anytime it’s between 60 and 70 degrees and a little breeze, it’s right where I grew up. It’s that nostalgic feeling to being back at home without really being there.”

Perhaps more important than weather and scenery, Rahm grew up putting on the same kind of devilish bumpy poa annua greens as those here at Pebble. Many players, especially those who live by the putter, can’t cope with their caprice.

“We’re going to miss putts. . . . The ball is going to bounce at some point. It’s the beauty of poa annua. It’s what it is,” Rahm said. “Since I grew up in this, I’m used to it. It can be very stressful, very difficult for some people to understand.”

Feel free to imagine an evil little grin.

You will hear the poa annua greens here discussed on TV, but the degree to which they will torture nerves cannot be overstated. For players prone to golf’s worst sin — self-defeating excuse-making — poa is the perfect culprit.

Even Tiger Woods, who set the record for galactic dominance with his 15-shot U.S. Open victory here in 2000 — “I drained everything,” he reflected this week — has a deferential respect for these small, fast, severely sloped greens.

“You catch those little seed heads that start popping up. Bent grass sits down, poa perks up. Good putts look like they should go in don’t go in. And you may pull one or push one that happens to bounce back in the hole,” Woods said.

A perfect example of poa perplexity Thursday was Fowler, who said: “I hit a lot of really good putts that I thought I’d made. . . . At the 14th, I finally made one. It was nice to see one do what I thought it would do.”

Perhaps Rory McIlroy, 30, who has won four major championships but none since the PGA in 2014, began this event with the most interesting tale of sudden golf revelation. At a champions dinner this week, attended by 33 of the 36 living U.S. Open champs, he loved a display that included Ben Hogan’s famous 1-iron from the 72nd hole at Merion and the now faded-to-pink visor that Arnold Palmer threw high into the crowd after his last U.S. Open-winning putt at Cherry Hills. “I’m a golf geek,” McIlroy said.

But what Rory valued most was a chat with Johnny Miller, who insisted on the value of fast starts in majors. That contradicts common wisdom, which says, “Just don’t shoot yourself out of the tournament on Thursday.”

McIlroy reviewed his career and realized in his four major wins he had started with 65, 67, 66 and 66. In his 17 most recent majors, he had three 69s and a lot of Thursday mediocrity. Suddenly, Rory had a new internal narrative that could partially explain his five years of frustration while also giving him a battle plan.

“That’s held me back,” McIlroy said of his Thursday struggles. “You look at the history of major championships — the first round is so important. It’s hard to catch up, especially when you start to chase on those really tough courses.”

McIlroy, who won the Canadian Open last week by shooting 64-61 on the weekend, opened this U.S. Open with a 68 for a tie for seventh place.

Everybody here seems to have such motivational or insightful tales to tell themselves. However, the most ambitious of all the self-narratives on display here — and the one that may have the longest-lasting impact on golf — is Woods’s new evaluation of the status of his entire career arc — and his chances of winning four more major championships to break Jack Nicklaus’s record of 18.

“If I keep progressing . . . how I’m getting better and better physically the last couple of years, I just need to give myself chances. Hypothetically, let’s say I give myself 10 years. That’s 40 major championships. That’s a lot of majors,” said Woods, who, just one year ago when he missed the cut at Shinnecock Hills, was viewed as a borderline has-been locked in a decade-long slump.

“Now the trick is can I keep myself healthy enough and strong enough and fast enough to endure all that, considering what my body has gone through,” Woods said. “Hopefully, I can make that happen.”

Here at Pebble Beach, 156 golfers arrived this week with love stories. Or with internal tales in which this turns out to be a magnificent week. For an amateur, that might mean making the cut. For Koepka, it is the dream of becoming the first person to win America’s national championship three straight times.

What we can’t imagine, we never accomplish. For many of us, that’s a huge dilemma. But it’s never a problem at the U.S. Open.

Fast, sleek, better-handling SUV option to consider

By Charles Fleming, Los Angeles Times

Faster, sleeker and better-handling than its predecessor, the 2019 Acura RDX represents an attractive option for SUV seekers who might also be looking at the BMW X3, Audi Q5, Mercedes GLC300 or Infiniti QX50. Highly revised for 2019, the new model features improvements all around. The turbocharged four-cylinder engine now puts out an impressive 272 horsepower and 280 pound-feet of torque. Through a 10-speed automatic transmission, using available all-wheel drive, the SUV also sits lower to the ground, on a stiffened suspension, to make the best use of all that power.

Acura, the upscale division of Tokyo-based Honda, makes exceptionally good cars with confusingly information-free names, an alphabet soup of ILX, TLX, RLX and so on.

The SUV line is represented by the RDX and its larger, three-row MDX sibling.

The company, without advertising as heavily or drawing the same fanboy enthusiasm as its European competitors, has enjoyed success with the RDX. Acura numbers show the small SUV outselling all others in its class from January to June this year.

For much of the week, I drove the RDX, in the Special Handling All Wheel Drive Advance trim. I wasn't quite sure what to make of it. Was it more sensible than sporty? More comfortable than compelling? One of my nieces answered the question. From the back seat one night she said, "It's, like, an adult SUV. For grown-ups."

That's it exactly. The RDX is sensible and sporty, comfortable and compelling, but decidedly more of the former than the latter.

The two-row SUV's cabin is an exercise in ambience. The front seats on the Advance trim are adjustable 16 ways, are wrapped in Napa leather and feature three-setting seat ventilation. (Both front and rear seats are heated.) Bits of real hardwood and polished aluminum accent the appealing interior.

Headroom and legroom are business-class generous. Visibility is excellent, and the standard sunroof opens a huge window to the sky.

The 16-speaker ELS Studio 3D sound system, designed by Grammy-winning engineer and producer Elliot Scheiner, is lush. It gets an audio assist, in the form of silence, from a very quiet HVAC system and noise-canceling windshield glass.

Rolling down the road, even at freeway speed, is like driving a listening booth. The music is crisp and clean — especially the tracks produced by Scheiner himself, including a few Bonnie Raitt songs, that were specifically engineered to play in the RDX and were made available by Acura on a flash drive stashed in the

ANOTHER LOOK: 2019 ACURA RDX

Highly revised for 2019, the new model features improvements all around. The turbocharged four-cylinder engine now puts out an impressive 272 horsepower and 280 pound-feet of torque. Through a 10-speed automatic transmission, using available all-wheel drive, the SUV also sits lower to the ground, on a stiffened suspension, to make the best use of all that power.

SUV's center console. Around town, the little turbo toddled smartly, though I found the throttle response a little jerky and all that low-end torque a little too quick to engage. Experimenting with the four drive modes — Comfort, Snow, Sport and Sport Plus — I eventually settled on Sport Plus, using the steering wheel-mounted paddle shifters for gear selection. On the road, the SUV behaved better. The stiffer suspension and lower ground clearance gave the RDX a sporty feel on the curving canyon roads. I could sense the all-wheel drive kicking in as I accelerated out of sharp turns, holding the road well as the turbo did its thing. On a longer haul, conditions improved. The lovely seats and sound system made for a wonderful Highway 101 weekend getaway to Santa Cruz, and almost quieted my quibbles. But I had some. The RDX Advance comes standard with a suite of safety features, including adaptive cruise control, lane-keeping assist, blind-spot monitoring and rear cross-traffic alerts. This trim line also features a head-up windshield display that lets the driver's eyes remain on the road at all times. These technological offerings could save a life, but they lack subtlety. The cruise control, particularly, was clumsy, braking late and hard when it sensed danger ahead, then surging forward aggressively when the danger had passed. I also struggled with the infotainment system. Acura's engineers chose not to use a touch-sensitive screen, opting instead for a touch pad on the center console, backed up by a few more traditional buttons and switches. Perhaps, with time, one would get used to it. But after a week in the car, I was still having difficulty getting to and staying on the function I needed, growing frustrated with my inability to make the right navigation or audio selections. The communication system, too, gave me trouble. Sometimes the phone booted up right away; other times, it wouldn't. And the voice activation feature? I've had cats that paid more attention to me when I spoke. Despite that, I'm pleased by the RDX's sales success; it's deserved because this is a good vehicle. Though it may not grab automotive attention like similar SUVs offered by Porsche, Jaguar, Alfa Romeo or the vehicles against which it directly competes, this slightly more anonymous Acura is a solid, sensible SUV. And unlike those European models, it's made by Honda, which means it's virtually bulletproof and problem-free. For a driver whose ego doesn't require European panache or nameplate bragging rights, it's one of the smarter SUV choices on the market.
