Muslims urged to ‘take center stage’

Community gets more politically active in era of immigration raids, racist tweets

BY NAUSHEEN HUSAIN

One week after Bushra Amiwala decided to run for office, her mom forwarded her an article about a Muslim judge in New York who was found dead in the Hudson River.

Although her father was unfazed — having for years predicted his first American-born child would run for president — Amiwala’s mother feared the political arena: You have to lie to be a politician. You will be attacked for wearing a hijab. You won’t have time to get married and will struggle to remain true to yourself.

Historically, immigrants have had a tendency to avoid public civic life, activists say. But in an era of immigration raids, presidential travel bans directed at mostly Muslim-majority countries, slurs against Muslims in elected office — and President Donald Trump’s racist tweets on Sunday about four female lawmakers — more members of the community are getting politically involved in more visible ways.

Emgage, a group that encourages civic involvement by Muslim Americans, found that voting by Muslim Americans went up by 25 percentage points between 2014 and 2018 in the four key states of Florida, Michigan, Ohio and Virginia. In the general population, that figure was up 14 percentage points.

“Back in the day, we didn’t know our elected officials,” said Amiwala, referring to when her parents moved to Chicago’s Rogers Park neighborhood from Karachi, Pakistan, in 1996. “None of us had met someone who had run for office. They all had such similar names and similar backgrounds.”

Now, Amiwala, 21, is one of at least 10 Muslims who has successfully run for elected office in

A two-day blast of extreme heat began baking the Chicago area Friday, forcing many people to heed officials’ warnings to stay inside or limit outdoor activity. Athreil Simpson, 8, of Omaha, Nebraska, cooled off in the fountain outside Wrigley Field before the Cubs game. As hot as it was, Chicago wasn’t expected to hit the record high. The worst of the heat is expected to pass by Saturday night following showers and thunderstorms. Chicagoland, Page 3

Iran says it seized British tanker

Latest move sets up new showdown with US and its allies

BY LIZ SLY

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Iran’s Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps seized at least one British tanker in the Strait of Hormuz on Friday, according to Iranian state media, setting up a new showdown with the West and demonstrating Tehran’s growing boldness as it seeks to challenge the United States and its allies in the strategic waterway.

A Revolutionary Guard statement read on Iranian state television said the British-flagged Stena Impero tanker had been seized in the Persian Gulf.

U.S. officials and shipping reports from the region indicated that a second tanker, the Mesdar, flagged in Liberia but operated by a British company, had also been seized, but that information could not be confirmed.

Both tankers were seen changing course and heading toward Iran as they traveled through the strategic Strait of Hormuz on Friday, according to shipping tracking service MarineTraffic.com. By early Saturday, the Mesdar had changed course again and appeared to have resumed its scheduled journey toward the Saudi port of Ras Tanura.

The Strait of Hormuz is the narrow waterway that controls access to the Persian Gulf, through which a fifth of the world’s oil is moved.

The British government said it was “urgently” seeking further information about both

Smollett portrayed as a victim twice over

Lawyers assert homophobic attack followed by frame-up

BY MEGAN CREPEAU

Calling Jussie Smollett’s prosecution a “travesty of justice,” the actor’s attorneys on Friday laid out arguments for his innocence in the case that made him an object of widespread derision and sparked the greatest crisis of Cook County State’s Attorney Kim Foxx’s career.

Far from being the architect of a hoax hate crime, Smollett’s attorneys say he was, in fact, a victim twice over: by suffering a real attack at the hands of two homophobic brothers and then being framed when the brothers lied to police.

The brothers were also working with at least one other conspirator — an as-yet-unidentified white man, the attorneys alleged for the first time in documents filed Friday.

Smollett’s attorneys laid out their defense in the greatest detail yet, all in an uphill effort to persuade Cook County Judge Michael Toomin to reverse his decision to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate why Foxx’s office in late March suddenly dropped all charges alleging Smollett made up the attack to promote his career. Toomin’s decision last month marked the latest bombshell in a case that has only gotten thornier since prosecutors abandoned the case less than three weeks after indicting Smollett on 16 counts of disorderly conduct.

Mother tells of fear of deportation amid confusion at O’Hare

BY ELVIA MALAGÓN

An immigrant mother whose three daughters were held by border protection officers at O’Hare said she rushed to the airport to pick up the girls after she was told they would be placed in state protective custody.

“It’s something I don’t wish upon anyone,” the mother said in Spanish of having her daughters, ages 9 to 13, held by Customs and Border Protection officers for more than 12 hours Thursday after they arrived on a flight from Mexico with a relative.

“You start to think a lot of things. You think about how your daughters are doing there inside. I thought that they treated them well, but still you have a sense of desperation,” the Chicago woman said in an interview Friday.

U.S. Customs and Border Protection confirmed the agency planned to call the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services to take protective custody of the girls if a legal guardian did not pick them up at the airport Thursday.

“We don’t hold children in the airport,” an agency spokesman said. “We have no ability to house them.”

The spokesman also said the agency was “not detaining children. We were holding children to make sure that they were turned over to their legal guardian.”

The children ended up in the agency’s hands because the relative with whom they flew in was denied entry to the U.S. A border protection official said the agency attempted numerous times to reach a parent to retrieve the children.

But while the girls are U.S. citizens, their parents are not, and the mother, who asked to be

“Not only have the media and the public failed to critically look at the evidence (and lack thereof) against Mr. Smollett, but now (Toomin) has accepted false media reports to presume Mr. Smollett guilty of charges which he pled not guilty to and which were dismissed against him,” the filing said.

Reached by phone Friday, the brothers’ attorney, Gloria Schmidt, said she hadn’t yet read Smollett’s filing but expressed confidence that “the evidence will come out.”

“My clients have fully cooperated, and will continue to fully cooperate with (prosecutors) and the police,” she said.

A statement issued Friday by Sheila O’Brien, a former state appellate judge who sought the special prosecutor from Toomin, referred to Smollett’s “Hollywood lawyers” and criticized their filing as “short on substance but big on flash and delay.”

Smollett, then an actor on the “Empire” TV series, created a media firestorm in late January when he reported being the victim of an attack by two people — one white — who shouted racist and homophobic slurs, and put a noose around his neck near his home in the Streeterville neighborhood. Smollett is black and openly gay.

Weeks later, though, Smollett was criminally charged for allegedly staging the attack with the help of Abimbola and Olabinjo Osundairo, two brothers of Nigerian descent whom police said he paid $3,500.

But less than three weeks after indicting Smollett on the false-report charges, Foxx’s office dropped all charges at an unannounced court hearing while still insisting to reporters later that same day that police had gotten it right. Days later, though, Foxx herself suggested for the first time that the evidence against Smollett was weaker — without offering any specifics.

As Smollett maintained his innocence, public outcry grew, with some calling for Foxx’s resignation.

Smollett’s attorneys, who have defended Smollett’s version from the start, told the Chicago Tribune this spring that prosecutors approached them early on about making the case go away. But Friday’s filing marks his lawyers’ first formal effort to detail the facts that they say exonerate Smollett.

The whole matter will be reopened anew when Toomin appoints a special prosecutor. In his decision, the veteran judge asserted that Foxx overstepped her authority when she put her top deputy in charge of Smollett’s prosecution after she recused herself. The special prosecutor would have broad powers to investigate Foxx’s office as well as even bring new charges against Smollett.

But Smollett’s attorneys argue Toomin’s ruling is on shaky legal ground in part because any further charges against Smollett would be violating the actor’s rights against double jeopardy. Toomin should reverse his plans to name a special prosecutor or at least prohibit whoever is appointed from charging Smollett again, they argued.

Smollett’s attorneys took Toomin to task for making no secret in his ruling that he believed Smollett staged the attack. That attitude surely affected his decision, the attorneys said, even though Toomin’s role was not to weigh in on Smollett’s guilt or innocence.

In one filing Friday, Smollett’s attorneys asked that Toomin be removed from presiding over the case, citing his alleged bias. They plan to take up the matter before the judge next week.

Much of Friday’s filings painted the Osundairo brothers as homophobic liars whose statements to police are not supported by independent evidence. They also alleged that the brothers’ attorney fed them a fabricated story to tell police in order to avoid charges.

The actor was widely mocked for saying one of his attackers was white before identifying the Osundairo brothers — who are black — as his attackers.

But police interviewed one witness who saw a white man loitering nearby around the time of the attack who appeared to have a rope under his jacket, Smollett’s attorneys revealed, citing police reports. Another witness said he saw a white man wearing a ski mask near the scene of the attack, according to the filing.

That pointed to at least one additional collaborator in the attack, Smollett’s attorneys contended.

One filing also repeated what the actor’s attorneys told the Tribune this spring: that a text from Smollett to Abimbola Osundairo, his friend and sometime trainer, asking for help “on the low” was taken out of context by police and prosecutors. Smollett, in fact, wanted Osundairo to bring him back illegal herbal steroids from an upcoming trip to Nigeria, they said.

Schmidt, the brothers’ attorney, has scoffed at that explanation, saying the body-building Osundairos believe in being steroid-free.

But Friday’s filing pointed to police records of the Osundairos’ internet browsing history on the day Smollett sent the “on the low” text that revealed searches for a bodybuilding supplement and visits to websites about related substances, Smollett’s attorneys noted.

“It is far more reasonable that Mr. Smollett’s text message about meeting on the low was in regards to banned steroids which (Abimbola) could obtain for him in Nigeria, as opposed to soliciting his trainer, and his older brother who Mr. Smollett had only met a few times, to stage a hate crime on him three days later,” the filing said.

The filing also alleged that the Osundairo brothers’ anti-gay bias was the motivation for their attack on Smollett. Police released messages between the brothers that referred to a gay man as a “sicko” and saying he should be locked up, the filing said.

In one of the case’s many strange legal twists, the Osundairo brothers have sued Smollett’s attorneys for publicly hinting that one of them had a sexual relationship with Smollett, saying that homosexuality is highly stigmatized in their native Nigeria.

The brothers have vehemently denied any homophobia. Other texts released by Chicago police showed that Abimbola Osundairo gently deflected an unknown man’s sexual advances and reacted without any apparent distaste to a text from Smollett in which he referred to a homosexual act.

Smollett’s attorneys also took the unusual step of seeking the public release of the Osundairos’ secret grand jury testimony, saying it was “necessary to level the playing field” given the massive media attention and the public statements by the brothers’ attorney.

“The Osundairo brothers should not be able to use the media to advance their narrative on the one hand, but on the other hand, shield from the public statements they gave under oath to the grand jury,” the filing said.

tankers. The operator of the Stena Impero tanker, Stena Bulk and Northern Marine Management, said the vessel was in international waters when it was “approached by unidentified small crafts and a helicopter during transit of the Strait of Hormuz.”

The ship diverted on a course north toward Iran and then contact was lost, the company said.

Britain’s Foreign Secretary Jeremy Hunt said he was “extremely concerned” by the possible seizures.

Britain “will respond in a way that is considered robust and we are absolutely clear that if this situation is not resolved quickly there will be serious consequences,” Hunt said.

When asked by journalists in Washington about the latest incidents, President Donald Trump said: “Let’s see what happens.”

Meanwhile, U.S. Central Command said the U.S. has intensified air patrols over the Strait of Hormuz in response to the seizure.

A Central Command spokesman, Lt. Col. Earl Brown, said a small number of additional patrol aircraft are flying in international airspace to monitor the situation. He also said Central Command’s naval arm has been in contact with U.S. ships operating in the area to ensure their safety.

The apparent diversions Friday follow Iran’s threats to retaliate for the seizure of an Iranian tanker by British forces off Gibraltar in July on suspicion of smuggling oil to Syria in violation of European Union sanctions.

If confirmed, however, they mark a wider escalation by Iran in its two-month-old campaign of threats and attacks against U.S. and allied warships and commercial shipping in the vicinity of the Persian Gulf, as Iran seeks to push back against the Trump administration’s imposition of tough new sanctions. Iran has denied U.S. allegations that it is behind most of the attacks.

The new tensions coincide with the arrival in the region of U.S. naval reinforcements aimed at deterring just such attacks against international shipping. Among the U.S. warships that have arrived in the region is the USS Boxer, which brought down an Iranian drone Thursday that had approached dangerously near, according to Trump and the Pentagon.

On Friday, Iranian television aired footage showing drone images of warships that the broadcaster said disproved Trump’s assertion that the U.S. military had destroyed an Iranian drone.

The television station said the footage was provided by the Revolutionary Guard and showed the USS Boxer entering the Strait of Hormuz. The video was also posted by Iran’s Press TV and included images taken from above what appeared to be a warship, but the veracity of the footage could not immediately be verified.

This latest spike in tensions came almost a month after Iran downed a U.S. drone over the same waterway, prompting Trump to consider launching a military strike against Iran.

Trump said Thursday that the USS Boxer destroyed the drone after it approached within 1,000 yards of the amphibious assault ship. The Pentagon confirmed that the incident took place.

Iran denied, however, that any encounter had occurred between one of its drones and a U.S. warship, insisting that all its drones were accounted for.

“We have not lost any drone in the Strait of Hormuz nor anywhere else,” Deputy Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said on his Twitter account. He suggested that the United States may have shot down one of its own drones “by mistake.”

Iran’s top military spokesman also said there had been no incident involving any Iranian drone.

“All Iranian drones that are in the Persian Gulf and the Strait of Hormuz, including the one which the U.S. mentioned, after carrying out scheduled identification and control missions, have returned to their bases,” said Brig. Gen. Abolfazl Shekari, according to Iran’s Tasnim News Agency.

The USS Boxer is part of an amphibious force that includes more than 2,000 Marines from the 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit, which arrived in the region this week. The Trump administration has accused Iran of being behind a string of incidents, including attacks and harassment against commercial shipping, that have contributed to the rising tensions in the region as the United States sets about squeezing Iran with tighter sanctions.

Iran has denied involvement.

Chicago broils as 2 days of extreme heat set in

BY MARIE FAZIO

A two-day blast of extreme heat began baking the Chicago area Friday as the temperature overnight fell to only 81 degrees, a possible record for the day.

Storms on Thursday postponed excessive heat warnings that went into effect at 10 a.m. Friday for Cook County and all of northern Illinois, southern Wisconsin and northwest Indiana. The worst of the heat was expected to pass by 7 p.m. Saturday.

"One of the hotter and more humid air masses that the area has seen since 2012 has arrived," the National Weather Service said in a bulletin.

At 2:37 p.m., temperatures at Midway Airport reached the high point of the day, 95 degrees, with a heat index of 113, according to NWS meteorologist Charles Mott.

By comparison, the temperature at O'Hare International Airport soared to 93, with a heat index of 107, at 5:05 p.m., Mott said. On the lakefront at Northerly Island, 93 was also the high.

Temperatures were expected to stay around 80 at O'Hare overnight Friday. So it was possible the minimum temperature for the day would break the record high minimum temperature of 78 degrees set in 2011, according to Amy Seeley, a meteorologist with the weather service's Chicago-area office.

Officials were warning people to limit outdoor activity, check on their neighbors and seek a cool place to wait out the dangerous temperatures. Transportation officials were warning of slowed trains and buckling pavement, while the Illinois Tollway deployed hot weather patrols to help drivers in the extreme heat.

Even as people tried to cool off, Evanston closed several beaches because of E. coli levels and two North Side beaches were closed because of hazardous swim conditions.

Some Chicagoans sought refuge in the water away from the city's beaches. One man jumped in the Chicago River at Dearborn Street. The man jumped in, swam back to shore, got out and ran away, said Larry Langford, spokesman for the Fire Department.

At the Pitchfork Music Festival on the West Side, the CTA stationed cooling buses nearby to help ward off heat exhaustion among the concertgoers.

Pitchfork on Wednesday announced its plan to combat the heat, including three cooling buses, free bottled water, a misting tent and three water bottle filling stations. Festival organizers also ordered 18,000 additional bottles of water for attendees.

"Organizers told us to prepare for a lot of dehydration, minor cuts and bruises," first-aid volunteer Elyse Dillon said. "We've been coordinating with the Fire Department, but every person has walked in to grab water. I think people took it really seriously."

Officials from the Fire and Water Management departments also were on the lookout for people opening fire hydrants in Chicago neighborhoods, which can affect water pressure in an entire neighborhood where a hydrant is opened.

Heat indices in the Chicago area were forecast to range from around 118 around Joliet to about 113 in downtown Chicago and Elgin, and about 109 in Waukegan. The most extreme heat was expected to hover over the southern half of Cook County, west into Kendall County and southwest to Pontiac.

Temperatures were forecast to remain in the mid- to upper 90s Saturday, with a heat index of 106 to 111. Showers and thunderstorms Saturday night should signal a break in the heat, as temperatures drop into the low 70s. Sunday's highs will be in the 80s inland and the upper 70s near the lake, with temperatures in the 70s and 80s the rest of the week.

Kelly to be taken to NY for arraignment

Ordered to state on racketeering charges

BY JASON MEISNER

Indicted R&B singer R. Kelly has been ordered brought to New York in custody for his arraignment on sweeping racketeering charges alleging he systematically recruited young girls for sexual abuse at concerts across the country.

Kelly, who is being held without bond at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in the Loop, will be brought by the U.S. Marshals Service to the federal courthouse in Brooklyn for an Aug. 2 hearing, court records made public on Friday show.

The singer will then be returned to Chicago in time for a status hearing on Sept. 4 on a separate indictment at the Dirksen U.S. Courthouse, according to the court records.

Also Friday, a former Kelly employee, Milton "June" Brown, pleaded not guilty before a federal magistrate judge in Chicago to a charge of conspiracy to receive child pornography.

The 13-count indictment alleged Brown and former manager Derrel McDavid conspired with Kelly to fix the superstar's 2008 child pornography trial in Cook County by paying off witnesses and victims to change their stories. The indictment also alleged they paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to recover child sex tapes before they got into the hands of prosecutors.

Both Kelly and McDavid previously pleaded not guilty to those charges.

Brown, who lives in Las Vegas, turned himself in to authorities there after the indictment was unsealed last week, court records show. He faces a mandatory minimum sentence of five years in prison if convicted, prosecutors said.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Young Kim on Friday ordered Brown released on his own recognizance.

Meanwhile, the decision to bring Kelly to New York for arraignment comes three days after U.S. District Judge Harry Leinenweber ordered him detained pending trial.

In arguing that Kelly be denied bond, prosecutors noted he's facing the possibility of life in prison if convicted. The singer's history of sexual abuse, manipulation and obstruction of justice also make him an "extreme danger" to the community, prosecutors said.

"We're talking seventh and eighth grade girls," Assistant U.S. Attorney Angel Krull said at the hearing Tuesday in Leinenweber's packed courtroom. "And it didn't happen once or twice. He sexually abused them hundreds of times before they turned 18."

In all, Kelly was accused in the two federal indictments of abusing a dozen victims going back to the 1990s, and prosecutors believe there are "many more," Krull said.

"The investigation is far from over," she said.

The 18-page New York indictment against Kelly alone alleged that it was standard practice for his entourage to issue wristbands to girls — some minors — attending his concerts that allowed them backstage access and direct interaction with Kelly. When Kelly identified a girl he wished to see again, he'd ask for her contact information or direct his associates to obtain it. The girls were then invited to meet with Kelly at future shows, with some provided lodging, according to the charges.

The charges alleged Kelly had rules for the girls he groomed. They were to call him "Daddy" and were not allowed to leave their rooms unless instructed by Kelly to do so, "including to eat or go to the bathroom," the indictment said.

Kelly also faces four separate indictments brought earlier this year in Cook County alleging he sexually assaulted one woman and sexually abused three others. All but one was allegedly underage at the time. Kelly has pleaded not guilty to those charges and had been free on a $1 million bond until his arrest last week with the separate federal indictments.

It's still unclear which case will take the forefront now that Kelly is charged in three separate jurisdictions.

In the meantime, Kelly has been held in isolation at the MCC since his July 11 arrest by federal agents while walking his dog outside his home in the Trump Tower.

His lawyer, Steven Greenberg, said Kelly has no access to television, is allowed only five minutes on the telephone each day and must meet with his legal team in a cramped room with only a small table.

'Hot weather patrols' issued on roads

BY MARY WISNIEWSKI

The Illinois Tollway has deployed "hot weather patrols" to find and assist motorists stranded in the extreme heat.

The Tollway said it uses the special 24-hour patrols when the weather is hot enough to be dangerous for stranded drivers. Temperatures were expected to be near 100 degrees on Friday and again Saturday, with high levels of humidity. The patrols will be out through Saturday.

Drivers should dial *999 to get help from the Tollway patrols, the agency said in a news release.

"Launching these Hot Weather Patrols is part of our commitment to safety to ensure drivers whose cars have become disabled can get out of the heat and obtain the assistance they need to reach their destination," Tollway executive director Jose Alvarez said.

A minimum of 12 patrol trucks are used in addition to the agency's usual emergency trucks and Illinois State Police squad cars, the Tollway said. The trucks can carry five passengers, so they can get out of the heat while their car is being serviced or be transported to a garage if necessary.

Typical problems that can strand drivers include running out of gas, dead batteries, flat tires and overheated radiators.

The Tollway advises drivers to make sure their engine fluids are at appropriate levels and that their vehicles' tires are properly inflated, since under-inflated tires are more likely to blow on hot pavement.

The agency also recommends that drivers carry emergency kits with water, nonperishable food, jumper cables, a first-aid kit, flares or an emergency beacon, hand tools and a flashlight with extra batteries.

identified only by her first name, Sylvia, said she feared she could be detained if she arrived to pick up her daughters.

The family, including the three girls, spoke with reporters Friday about the experience of having their future in flux for nearly 13 hours.

While immigration advocates and elected officials convened at the international terminal, demanding to know why the girls weren't being released, the children had no idea of the effort being made to reunite them with their parents.

The girls arrived at O'Hare about 3:30 a.m. Thursday on a monthlong trip in Guadalajara where they spent time with their grandparents, aunts and cousins. The girls also visited the beach town of Ixtapa.

But the fun ended abruptly when their older cousin who accompanied them was "deemed inadmissible" into the U.S. by Customs and Border Protection officers.

The relative had attempted to enter with the wrong kind of visa, the agency said Friday, without elaborating.

The girls were allowed to call their mother to pick them up, but fear set in for Alejandra, 13, when, she said, one of the officers made a comment suggesting the parents weren't picking them up because they were "illegals."

"I was scared and I knew that they could deport them," Alejandra said in Spanish.

The mother, Sylvia, had the same fear. It's why she'd sent her son, who has DACA protections to remain in the country, with his wife, a U.S. citizen, to pick up the girls from the airport.

"It's all the changes that they have been doing with all immigrants," Sylvia said in Spanish. She said she and her husband have applied for visas to stay in the U.S. "For any reason, it doesn't matter, sometimes they have violated (immigrants') rights even if you have a pending case, they don't care. Because I'm informed, I listen to everything, I said, 'No, this could happen to me.'"

But after her son and daughter-in-law were turned away, Sylvia said she called and then went to the Mexican Consulate's office in Chicago for help. Word of the children's plight spread quickly, triggering a network of immigration advocates to rush to O'Hare to raise questions and bring attention to the situation.

Another of the girls, 10-year-old Evelyn, said she and her sisters grew increasingly frustrated as the hours passed. She took naps on a bench, on top of her luggage and on a cot.

The girls were given lasagna, oatmeal and granola bars, but they think some of the food was expired — a claim the agency denies. Still, she said she and her sisters ate the food because they were hungry.

By noon Thursday, Monly Ruiz-Velasco, an attorney and executive director of PASO West Suburban Action Project, had gotten involved. Her group does immigration advocacy in the suburbs.

Ruiz-Velasco provided federal officials with a notarized letter from the mother saying she consented to having her daughters sent home with an advocate, but officials said they would not release them to anyone but a parent. Further, the agency on Friday said their legal counsel could not verify that the mother had actually signed the letter.

The Mexican Consulate spent hours negotiating with Customs and Border Protection officials and were guaranteed the mother would not be detained, Ruiz-Velasco said.

A Customs and Border Protection spokesperson would not confirm if agents spoke to the family or advocates about the immigration status of the parents, but the department stressed its goal was to have a legal guardian pick up the girls.

U.S. Rep. Jan Schakowsky, a Democrat from Evanston who happened to arrive at O'Hare from Washington on Thursday, joined the crowd of activists and reporters that grew as the hours went by.

Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot also personally intervened. Eventually Sylvia, accompanied by Schakowsky, representatives from the consulate and Ruiz-Velasco, walked into the office to pick up her daughters.

Ruiz-Velasco said the family did all the right things. What happened to the family is not rare, she asserted, but what stands out is that Sylvia alerted the consulate's office quickly. Typically advocates hear about parents being detained after picking up their children in airports once they have already been placed in deportation proceedings.

"I think in the end because of the community pressure from the Mexican Consulate, from elected officials, from everybody, we were able to get assurances ... that they (would) not take negative action against the mom," Ruiz-Velasco said.

"I think they really just wanted us to go away. I think if all that had not been present, we would have had either the mom put into deportation proceedings or the children put in DCF's custody."

The family is unsure of what they will do next. Sylvia hasn't shaken the fear of being deported. But the family reunion has brought some relief to the young girls.

"I feel very safe now because I'm with my parents," Evelyn said.

Muslims

Illinois in the past few years. A rising senior at DePaul University, she was elected to the Skokie School District 73.5 Board of Education in April and is one of the youngest Muslims elected in the country.

In 2017, when Amiwala unsuccessfully ran for the Cook County Board, community support entailed words of encouragement from mosque leaders but not much else. "They were like, 'That's great, mashallah! When can we vote for you?'" she said.

By the time she ran again in 2019 — after an outpouring of support from the community and even her previous opponent, Cook County Commissioner Larry Suffredin — networks of politically minded Muslims had begun working together.

"It started as several groups in their own silos," said Reema Kamran, a co-founder and the executive director of the Illinois Muslim Civic Coalition. "It was people going, 'Hey, I really need to talk to someone about blank.'"

Funded by grants and donations, the coalition has worked with candidates in the past two election cycles, cold-calling constituents, knocking on doors, and using mosques and community centers to encourage Muslims to vote. They also held their first campaign training session for Muslim candidates in December 2018 and joined forces with other local civic groups.

"Because we've had people who've run for office already, like Bushra, we were able to put together resources for new folks who wanted to run," Kamran said. "And it gave us a chance to come together and talk about how to improve civic engagement in our community as a whole."

Campaign and moral support

Raabia Khan was elected to a Lake County school district board this year. She worked with a partner of the coalition, the Northern Illinois American Muslim Alliance, to find resources and advice while campaigning.

"Sometimes, you just need to tell someone that you had a bad day canvassing," said Khan, who has four children at Oak Grove School, a K-8 school in Green Oaks, and also attended the school when she was a kid.

Her parents, who were Pakistani immigrants, helped establish the first mosque in Lake County, she said, and the Muslim community was excited to see her run for a board position. In the school community, she is seen as a leader for South Asian and Muslim families, often representing their views to school administrators, who have been responsive to the concerns of different populations, she said.

But not every community has been as welcoming.

While Sara Sayed Sadat was knocking on doors with her kids in Lisle, she said she heard the phrase "get out of this country" more than once. And though her campaign was bolstered by many members of the Democratic Party, some advisers suggested she remove her middle name from campaign materials.

"To hear that kind of negativity from people who are supposed to support me was disheartening," she said. "I'm not a size 2, blond-haired, blue-eyed person. My identity is mine, and I wanted to run on my full name."

Sadat, who is an Indian immigrant, did just that and now serves as a village trustee in Lisle. While the coalition provided fundraising, advertising and strategy support, Sadat received moral support from her 13-year-old daughter.

"The first time someone told us to go back to where we came from, my daughter told me that she's heard that at school, too," said Sadat. "We took a moment, had some ice cream and went back out the next day."

'Time to take center stage'

While helping Muslim candidates in the Chicago area run for office is a priority for the coalition, finding ways to engage Muslim voters is part of a wider strategy, said educator and coalition co-founder Dilara Sayeed.

In a 2018 Pew report, the difference between how Muslim immigrants view living in the U.S. versus American-born Muslims is stark: 65% of immigrant Muslims said there is a lot of discrimination against Muslims. Of American-born Muslims, the number is a whopping 91%.

"Our message to the community is, continue your leadership. Be civic and social leaders," Sayeed said. "You're welcome to do it behind the scenes, as we've been taught in some of our cultures to do, but when it is time to take center stage, be unafraid."

Sara Rezvi, a graduate student at University of Illinois at Chicago who joined Saturday's rally at Daley Plaza to protest U.S. immigration policy, said it is important to acknowledge fear but participate anyway. Rezvi, who was born in Pakistan and is a naturalized citizen, said there is real fear in her family that citizenship for naturalized citizens could be revoked by the Trump administration.

"It's especially hard for us because South Asian communities have benefited from acting white and distancing ourselves from other nonwhite groups," Rezvi said. "I think there's a lot of soul-searching we need to do, and I think we need to understand that it's going to be necessary for us to risk our comfort in order to fight."

She also said she was disappointed that more Muslims didn't attend the Daley Plaza rally.

"My activism is related to the faith. We know the Prophet married women who were powerful and strong. We know the faith dictates we protect the vulnerable and especially children," Rezvi said. "It's hard to be in spaces like this and not see more of our people."

Being counted is another priority for the coalition, which has started working with the U.S. Census Bureau to form an Illinois Muslim Complete Count Committee. The committee will work to make sure Muslims, considered a "hard-to-count" population, are aware the next census is in 2020 and how important it is that the community is counted.

The census presents challenges because Muslim communities are at the intersection of various hard-to-count populations, including immigrants, Asian Americans, African Americans, renters and non-English speakers.

Baker Siddiquee, who is a member of the coalition, said trust is a major factor with the community, which has sometimes struggled with law enforcement.

Muslim communities have a long history of being cautious of law enforcement. Besides dealing with religion-based hate crimes, mosque communities often have to battle zoning boards and local groups who don't want new mosques built, and surveillance from authorities they must rely on for protection.

Starting in 2011, The Associated Press reported on extensive spying and surveillance of mosques in New York City by the New York Police Department.

More recently, journalist and documentary filmmaker Assia Boundaoui discovered that her Muslim community in Bridgeview was the target of an FBI surveillance project called "Operation Vulgar Betrayal." Cases like these, which are now more widely acknowledged, have often created distrust of authorities, even if those authorities — like the Census Bureau — don't directly work with law enforcement.

"We've made some progress with these relations, at least with security issues, but it doesn't always feel significant," Siddiquee said.

The coalition's census efforts have included education campaigns to encourage Muslims to self-respond or volunteer to fill out census questionnaires starting in March 2020.

The next generation

As millennial and 40-something Muslims — who are more settled than their parents were — have come into their own, they have helped organize these new political support groups, Kamran said. She cited two Muslim politicians from the Midwest as inspiration: U.S. Reps. Ilhan Omar and Rashida Tlaib.

Omar, a former refugee born in Somalia who represents Minnesota, has come under attack by Republicans and Democrats for her criticism of Israel and the role of money in politics. Michigan's Tlaib became the first Palestinian American woman in Congress. For many young Muslim women in particular, Omar and Tlaib are examples of how to engage in politics without having to compromise one's values, Kamran and Amiwala said.

Omar and Tlaib have been vocal about denouncing Trump and have called for his impeachment. After the president tweeted over the weekend that the minority congresswomen should "go back and help fix the totally broken and crime infested places from which they came," they fired back on social media and in a Monday news conference, calling the tweets a distraction and criticizing the white nationalism behind the president's words.

Three of the four congresswomen were born in the U.S., including Tlaib, Reps. Ayanna Pressley of Massachusetts and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York.

"The first generation establishes the mosques and the schools for the community," Kamran said. "The next generations get to do things like civic engagement. It's a time for us to step up."

During her run for school board, Amiwala was part of the pilot episode of "Run," a reality show that features five female political experts assisting women running for office around the country. Amiwala appears in the trailer of the show as the team helps her with campaign tools like technology, canvassing and comedy.

And despite the distrust that exists among Muslims who have felt left out of civic life, Amiwala said that since her involvement on the school board, she has seen a 180-degree turn in even her mom's involvement.

"When the marijuana vote was happening, my mom was the one who was like, 'Did you hear that someone cracked an egg on the floor?'" said Amiwala, referring to state Rep. Anthony DeLuca cracking an egg into a frying pan to represent "your brain on drugs."

"She reads this stuff now. It's so cool."

Migrants seeking asylum in the United States line up for meals near the international bridge in Matamoros, Mexico.

DHS rolls out new policy for asylum seekers

Migrants will be sent back to dangerous part of Mexico

BY NOMAAN MERCHANT
Associated Press

HOUSTON — The U.S. government on Friday expanded its requirement that asylum seekers wait outside the country to a part of the Texas Rio Grande Valley across from one of Mexico's most dangerous cities.

The Department of Homeland Security said that it would implement its Migrant Protection Protocols in Brownsville, Texas, across the border from Matamoros, Mexico. DHS says it anticipates the first asylum seekers will be sent back to Mexico starting Friday.

Under the so-called "Remain in Mexico" policy, asylum seekers are briefly processed and given a date to return for an immigration court hearing before being sent back across the southern border. Since January, the policy has been implemented at several border cities including San Diego and El Paso, Texas. At least 18,000 migrants have been sent back to Mexico under the policy, according to Mexico's National Migration Institute.

The U.S. is trying to curtail the large flow of Central American migrants passing through Mexico to seek asylum under American law. The busiest corridor for unauthorized border crossings is the Rio Grande Valley, at Texas' southernmost point.

The policy announcement came as groups of lawmakers visited the region Friday to examine detention facilities operated by the U.S. Border Patrol, including the processing center in McAllen, Texas, where hundreds of adults and children are detained in fenced-in pens.

Standing outside the processing center, Sen. Jeff Merkley of Oregon criticized conditions inside the facilities and other Trump administration programs cracking down on asylum seekers.

"We want them treated with dignity and respect as we would want our family members to be treated," he said.

DHS said it had coordinated with the Mexican government to expand the policy. But the Trump administration has pressured Mexico to crack down on migrants, threatening earlier this year to impose crippling tariffs until both sides agreed on new measures targeting migration.

Matamoros is at the eastern edge of the U.S.-Mexico border in Tamaulipas state, where organized crime gangs are dominant and the U.S. government warns citizens not to visit due to violence and kidnappings.

The city is also near where a Salvadoran father and his 23-month-old daughter were found drowned in the Rio Grande, in photos that were shared around the world.

Many people, including families with young children, have slept for the last several months in a makeshift camp near one of the international bridges. Thousands more stay in hotels, shelters or boarding houses. Only a few migrants daily have been allowed to seek asylum under another Trump administration policy limiting asylum processing known as "metering."

A list run by Mexican officials has more than 1,000 people on it, said Elisa Filippone, a U.S.-based volunteer who visits Matamoros several times a week to deliver food and donated clothes. But many others not on the list wait in shelters. There are rumors that migrants are shaken down for bribes to join the list, Filippone said.

She described a desperate situation that could be made worse if people are forced to wait longer in Mexico for their asylum claims to be processed.

"I'm afraid that Matamoros is about to catch on fire," she said.

DHS recently implemented the "Remain" policy for migrants in Nuevo Laredo, across from Laredo, Texas. About 1,800 asylum seekers and migrants are currently waiting in Nuevo Laredo, where some have reported being kidnapped and extorted by gangs.

"I don't want to go out on the street. I'm afraid the same men will do something to me or my boys," said one woman, insisting on speaking anonymously out of fear for their safety.

People in Nuevo Laredo were told to return in September for U.S. court dates. At other points of the border, wait times have stretched to several months.

Unlike in criminal court, the U.S. government does not have to provide lawyers to people in the immigration court system. Attorneys in South Texas have long questioned where they could meet with potential clients in Tamaulipas.

Many migrants who get to the U.S. have exhausted all their resources by the time they arrive, said Lisa Brodyaga, an attorney who has represented asylum seekers for decades.

"It would be extremely difficult for them to find attorneys who would have the time and the ability and the willingness to expose themselves to what's going in Matamoros," she said.

Mueller probe witness faces child sex trafficking charge

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A businessman who served as a key witness in special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation now faces a charge of child sex trafficking in addition to transporting child pornography. An indictment made public Friday charges Lebanese-American businessman George Nader, 60, with transporting a 14-year-old boy from Europe to Washington in February 2000 and engaging in sex acts with him.

That charge comes on top of child pornography charges leveled against him when he was arrested last month.

Nader's name shows up over 100 times in Mueller's report. It details his efforts to serve as liaison between a Russian banker close to Russia's Vladimir Putin and members of President Trump's transition team. Nader also served as an adviser to the United Arab Emirates, a close Saudi ally.

Painting stolen by Nazi soldier is back in a Florence museum

FLORENCE, Italy — A Dutch painting, stolen by retreating Nazis and sent by a German soldier as a present to his wife, came back to a Florence museum Friday, thanks largely to a relentless campaign by the Uffizi Galleries' director, a German.

The foreign ministers of German and Italy were on hand Friday at Palazzo Pitti, a Renaissance palace that is part of the Uffizi Galleries, for the unveiling of "Flower Vase," a masterpiece by Jan van Huysum, an early 18th-century artist whose still-life works were sought in his day.

Uffizi director Eike Schmidt this year urged his native country to return the work. He had posted on a gallery wall three labels where the painting had hung before being taken during World War II: "stolen," the labels read in Italian, English and German.

Trump's Labor pick Scalia has record of opposing regulations

WASHINGTON — Eugene Scalia has a decades-long record of challenging Labor Department and other federal regulations, as well as a famous last name. The combination proved irresistible to President Donald Trump.

Trump selected Scalia on Thursday to be his new labor secretary. If formally nominated and confirmed, he'll join an administration that has moved aggressively to reverse regulations and work under a president who had repeatedly lauded Scalia's late father, Justice Antonin Scalia.

The president announced the news on Twitter less than a week after his previous secretary, Alexander Acosta, said he would resign amid renewed criticism of how, as a federal prosecutor, he handled a 2008 secret plea deal with wealthy financier Jeffrey Epstein.

Protesters demonstrate Friday at the entrance of Puerto Rican Gov. Ricardo Rossello's La Fortaleza residence in Old San Juan, demanding he resign over a series of leaked online chats insulting women, political opponents and the victims of Hurricane Maria.

3,000 federal inmates released under criminal justice overhaul

WASHINGTON — More than 3,100 federal inmates were being released Friday by the Bureau of Prisons as part of a criminal justice overhaul signed into law last year.

The First Step Act gives judges more discretion in sentencing, eases mandatory minimum sentences and encourages inmates to participate in programs aimed at reducing recidivism. The Trump administration has promoted the overhaul as a bipartisan effort to address concerns that too many Americans were imprisoned for nonviolent crimes as a result of the war on drugs.

The inmates were walking out of federal prisons and halfway houses across the country. The releases are part of an increase for "good conduct time" under the law. More than 1,600 other inmates have qualified for reduced sentences under a separate provision of the law that allows some prisoners locked up for crack cocaine charges to ask for sentencing reduction.

The Bureau of Prisons declined to provide specific details about the inmates being released, citing privacy concerns. Nearly 900 were to be turned over to other law enforcement agencies because of detainees filed by Immigration and Customs Enforcement and local authorities, according to Hugh Hurwitz, acting director of the Bureau of Prisons.

The Justice Department is diverting about $75 million from within the Bureau of Prisons' budget, which was used for care, programming and administrative tasks, in order to put in place the First Step Act. Federal officials say they are working with Congress to ensure additional funding for the coming years.

Trump says he's trying to help rapper A$AP Rocky WASHINGTON — Urged on by the first lady and celebrities, President Donald Trump said Friday that he is trying to help free rapper A$AP Rocky, who has been held in police custody in Sweden for weeks.

"I will be calling the very talented Prime Minister of Sweden to see what we can do about helping A$AP Rocky." Trump tweeted from aboard Air Force One, where he said he had just spoken with rapper Kanye West about Rocky's situation.

Rocky, a Grammy-nominated artist born Rakim Mayers, has been behind bars since early this month as Swedish police investigate a fight he was allegedly involved in in Stockholm before appearing at a music festival. Videos on social media appear to show a person being thrown onto the ground by Rocky. A defense lawyer has said it was self-defense.

Police: 9 dead, 16 injured in truck crash in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines — A truck carrying more than two dozen villagers, mostly children on their way to a school festival, lost control Friday on a downhill road and flipped on its side, leaving eight students and an adult dead in the central Philippines, police said.

Police investigator Nelson Saquibal said 16 others, including the driver, were brought to a hospital after the accident in Boljoon town in Cebu province. The students from two village schools were on their way to attend a cultural, health and sports festival in the town center, he said.

Saquibal said some of the students were pinned under the truck.

Deadly road accidents are common in the Philippines because of weak enforcement of traffic laws, rickety vehicles and inadequate road safety railings and signs.

In Ohio: A shipping business in Ohio said two workers died after they were trapped in a silo filled with grain. The workers became trapped Friday morning inside the silo operated by The Andersons in Toledo.

A Toledo fire department spokesman said crews spent nearly two hours trying to reach the men. He said at one point they were able to make contact with one of the workers.

Rescue crews had brought in special equipment to try to stop the grain from collapsing on the men.

A statement released by The Andersons said the company is shaken by the loss of two of its workers. The company said it will work with authorities to probe what happened.

Ex-NSA contractor sentenced to 9 years for stolen papers

BY ERIC TUCKER AND
MICHAEL KUNZELMAN
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — A former National Security Agency contractor who stored two decades' worth of classified documents at his Maryland home was sentenced Friday to nine years in prison.

Harold Martin, 54, apologized to the federal judge who sentenced him for a theft that prosecutors have called "breathtaking" in scope.

"My methods were wrong, illegal and highly questionable," Martin told U.S. District Judge Richard Bennett.

The punishment was in line with the nine-year sentence called for under his plea agreement, in which he admitted guilt to a single count of willful retention of national defense information. The charge carries a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison. Martin gets credit for the nearly three years he has spent behind bars since his arrest.

A prosecutor and defense attorney both noted there is no evidence that Martin intended to transmit any of the classified information to anyone, but the judge said the trove of records contained "very sensitive material."

"That means people's

JOSE LUIS MAGANA/AP

A 2016 raid at the home of former contractor Harold Martin revealed a trove of classified documents.

lives were potentially in danger," Bennett said.

The sentencing resolves a mysterious case that broke into the open in 2016, when FBI agents conducting a raid found a massive trove of stolen government documents inside his home, car and storage shed.

"This case is enormously significant not only for the Justice Department but also for the intelligence community," Robert Hur, the U.S. attorney in Maryland, told The Associated Press in an interview before the sentencing. "In any case where you have someone who holds a security clearance at the level that Mr. Martin did and chooses to betray that public trust in such a profound way, it puts national security at risk."

Prosecutors initially said 50 terabytes had been found, though Hur said that estimate had been revised significantly downward. The information spanned from the mid-1990s to the present and included personal details of government employees and "Top Secret" email chains, handwritten notes describing the NSA's classified computer infrastructure, and descriptions of classified technical operations.

The case attracted particular attention since the raid took place just weeks after a mysterious internet group calling itself the Shadow Brokers surfaced online to advertise the sale of hacking tools stolen from the NSA.

The U.S. believes that North Korea and Russia were able to capitalize on stolen hacking tools to unleash punishing global cyberattacks.

Prosecutors never linked Martin to the Shadow Brokers or charged him in the theft. But prosecutors say he nonetheless jeopardized national security through habitually taking home secret and classified government documents and carelessly storing them.

"He knew this was wrong, dangerous and illegal," Justice Department prosecutor Zachary Myers said.

Defense attorneys, meanwhile, described him as a compulsive hoarder who never betrayed his country. One of his lawyers, James Wyda, said Martin struggled for years with undiagnosed autism spectrum disorder.

"Instability and isolation were constants throughout Mr. Martin's childhood and adult life," Wyda said, adding that the stolen documents "were profoundly important to him when he was in the throes of his mental health situation."

But Hur said defense attorneys' characterization minimized the crime.

"This isn't just hoarding," Hur told the AP. "It isn't like wandering into someone's house and finding stacks of newspapers or library books or junk. This is highly classified information, the compromise of which is going to do grave damage to national security."

In familiar reversal, Trump now defends crowd at rally

BY ALAN FRAM,
DARLENE SUPERVILLE
AND JONATHAN LEMIRE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump renewed his attacks on a Somali-born congresswoman Friday while reversing his previous criticisms of a North Carolina crowd who chanted "send her back," defending them as "patriots" while again questioning the loyalty of four Democratic lawmakers of color.

In a week that has been full of hostile exchanges over race and love of country on both sides, Trump returned to a pattern that has become familiar during controversies of his own making: Ignite a firestorm, backtrack from it, but then double down on his original, inflammatory position.

"You know what I'm unhappy with?" Trump answered when reporters at the White House asked if he was unhappy with the Wednesday night crowd. "Those people in North Carolina, that stadium was packed. It was a record crowd. And I could have filled it 10 times, as you know. Those are incredible people. They are incredible patriots. But I'm unhappy when a congresswoman goes and says, 'I'm going to be the president's nightmare.'"

It was another dizzying twist in a saga sparked by the president's racist tweets about Democratic Rep. Ilhan Omar of Minnesota, who moved from Somalia as a child, and her colleagues Reps. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York, Rashida Tlaib of Michigan and Ayanna Pressley of Massachusetts.

The moment took an ugly turn at the rally when the crowd's "send her back" shouts resounded for 13 seconds as Trump made no attempt to interrupt them. He paused in his speech and surveyed the scene, talking in the uproar, though the next day he claimed he did not approve of the chant and tried to stop it.

But on Friday, he made clear he was not disavowing the chant and again tore into Omar, the target of the chant.

"You can't talk that way about our country. Not when I'm president," Trump said. "These women have said horrible things about our country and the people of our country."

He also tweeted that it was "amazing how the Fake News Media became 'crazed' over the chant 'send her back' by a packed Arena (a record) crowd in the Great State of North Carolina, but is totally calm & accepting of the most vile and disgusting statements made by the three Radical Left Congresswomen."

Omar was defiant Thurs-

Rep. Ilhan Omar, D-Minn., was greeted by a cheering crowd Thursday at the Minneapolis airport.

day, telling reporters at the Capitol that she believes the president is a "fascist" and casting the confrontation as a fight over "what this country truly should be."

"We are going to continue to be a nightmare to this president because his policies are a nightmare to us. We are not deterred. We are not frightened," she told a cheering crowd that greeted her like a local hero at the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport as she returned from Washington.

The back-and-forth captured the potential impacts of Trump's willingness to inject racist rhetoric into his reelection fight. Trump's allies distanced themselves from the chant, fretting over the voters it might turn off in next year's election and beyond. Democrats, meanwhile, pointed to the episode as a rallying cry to energize and mobilize their supporters to vote Trump out of office.

Trump's double flip-flop was reminiscent of his response to the violent clash between white supremacists and anti-racist demonstrators in Charlottesville, Virginia, in August 2017.

Then, he initially blamed violence on "both sides" of the altercation. After a wave of bipartisan condemnation and scathing cable news coverage, he issued a clean-up statement at the White House days later. Yet, after watching the response to his reversal, he doubled back to his original position during a wild Trump Tower news conference.

This week, Trump started the tumult by tweeting Sunday that Omar and three other congresswomen could "go back" to their native countries if they were unhappy here.

Even by Trump's standards, the campaign rally offered an extraordinary tableau for American politics: a president drinking in a crowd's cries to expel a congresswoman from the country who's his critic and a woman of color.

It was also the latest demonstration of how Trump's verbal cannonades are capable of dominating the news. Democrats had hoped the spotlight Thursday would be on House passage of legislation to boost the minimum wage for the first time in a decade.

Fed expectations, Iran tensions hit S&P 500

Lower rate cut, escalation in Mideast drag stocks lower

BY STAN CHOE AND DAMIAN J. TROISE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — U.S. stocks pulled further back from their records on Friday to cap the weakest week for the S&P 500 since May.

Indexes sloshed between small gains and losses for much of the day before turning lower in the afternoon after Iran said it seized a British oil tanker, the latest escalation of tensions between Tehran and the West. Reined-in expectations for how deeply the Federal Reserve will cut interest rates at its next meeting also weighed on stocks.

The S&P 500 fell 18.50 points, or 0.6%, to 2,976.61. After setting its record high on Monday, the index saw mostly lower and lost 1.2% for the week. It's just the second down week for the index in the last seven.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 68.77, or 0.3%, to 27,154.20, and the Nasdaq composite lost 60.75, or 0.7%, to 8,146.49.

Momentum for stocks has slowed since early June, when they began soaring on expectations that the Federal Reserve will cut interest rates for the first time in a decade to ensure the U.S. economy doesn't succumb to weaknesses abroad. The Fed's next meeting is scheduled for the end of this month.

Late Thursday, Treasury yields sank after comments by Fed officials raised expectations that it may cut rates by half a percentage point, rather than the typical quarter point. But yields climbed Friday as the market grew more convinced that the Fed will cut just 0.25 percentage points July 31.

"It could be 25 wasted," said Brent Schutte, chief investment strategist at Northwestern Mutual Wealth Management Company, who said a half-point cut would be more effective. "I think it's more important to shock the market a bit and convince the market they're serious about pushing inflation above 2%."

The yield on the 10-year Treasury rose to 2.05% from 2.04% Thursday. The two-year yield, which is more influenced by expectations of Fed moves, climbed to 1.81% from 1.77%.

Until the Fed's meeting, investors are focusing on whether companies can top the meager expectations Wall Street has for the profits they made during the spring.

Microsoft jumped in morning trading after reporting stronger earnings for April through June than analysts expected, though it faded as the afternoon progressed and ended the day with just a 0.1% gain.

Several banks climbed after reporting stronger-than-expected earnings, but financial stocks in the S&P 500 were down overall. That was partly because of a 2.8% drop for American Express, which reported stronger earnings for the latest quarter than analysts forecast but did not raise its full-year forecast.

"The biggest overall trend is if you beat, you may be mildly rewarded, and if you miss, you are going to get pounded," said J.J. Kinahan, chief market strategist for TD Ameritrade.

Energy stocks had the biggest gains in the S&P 500 after the price of oil climbed on worries about possible supply disruptions.

Britain's foreign secretary said Iranian authorities seized two vessels in the Strait of Hormuz, one British-flagged and the other under Liberia's flag. The move comes two days after the United States said it downed an Iranian drone in the strait, which is a key waterway for moving oil.

Benchmark U.S. crude oil climbed 33 cents, or 0.6%, to settle at $55.63 after being down earlier in the day. Brent crude, the international standard, rose 54 cents, or 0.9%, to $62.47 per barrel.

Boeing had one of the biggest gains in the S&P 500, even though it said it will take a $4.9 billion charge to cover possible compensation it will pay airlines following the grounding of its 737 Max jet. That's a huge number, analysts concede, but it may provide some certainty to investors who had worried the payments could be much higher. Boeing also said the figure assumes its 737 Max jets return to service later this year.

Boeing shares rose 4.5% and helped drive industrial stocks to one of the biggest gains of the 11 sectors that make up the S&P 500, at 0.5%.

Cresco Labs is looking to relocate its dispensary

Cannabis company seeking a larger spot due to growth

BY ALLY MAROTTI

Cresco Labs, one of the largest cannabis companies in the state, is looking for a bigger home for its MedMar Lakeview medical dispensary.

A public notice appeared recently in the window of John Barleycorn tavern in the Wrigleyville neighborhood — less than half a mile from MedMar Lakeview — noting that a Cresco-owned venture intended to "establish a medical cannabis dispensary" there. The move would require zoning approval.

Chicago-based Cresco has been looking to move the dispensary to a larger spot to accommodate growing patient count and demand for medical marijuana, said spokesman Jason Erkes.

Almost 79,000 patients are enrolled in Illinois' medical marijuana program, an increase of more than 24,000 since February. The growth has been spurred in part by the state's elimination of background and fingerprint check requirements for patients, and reduction in wait times for medical cards.

Meanwhile, operators around the state are preparing for recreational marijuana sales, which are set to start Jan. 1.

Under the law Gov. J.B. Pritzker signed last month legalizing recreational use, existing medical dispensaries may apply to sell recreational marijuana as well. They may also apply to open a second location.

In all, Cresco co-owns or owns five dispensaries and operates three cultivation facilities in Illinois.

The company has applied with the state to sell recreational cannabis at its five existing dispensaries, Erkes said. If the company relocates its Lakeview facility across from Wrigley Field, it is unclear whether Cresco would have to reapply for a license to sell recreational marijuana there.

The state has not started accepting applications for second dispensary locations.

Municipalities and counties may ban cannabis businesses. Chicago has not yet established any zoning rules for the recreational industry.

Sam Sanchez, the owner of John Barleycorn and the building where it is located, did not respond to a request for comment.

Other John Barleycorn locations have closed in recent years, including its original Lincoln Park spot, which opened in 1963, and its River North location, which was replaced by Old Crow Smokehouse.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

We put a man on the moon

Fifty years ago, Oak Street Beach, tucked into a curved concourse of concrete, hosted an unforgettable summertime scene. This urban pocket park of hot sand sported colorful beach towels with young professionals and other Chicagoans lying down or sitting cheek by jowl as far as you could see, up and down the shore.

There was a relaxed hum of chatter, soft laughter, the splashing of languid swimmers, the low lapping of gentle waves on Lake Michigan. Hundreds of transistor radios created a symphony of happy summer sounds. We enjoyed a blindingly bright sunny day, the sky pale blue, as a luminous crescent moon hung over the distant Drake Hotel.

Slowly, the beach grew quiet as all radios turned to the announcement of the first man walking on the moon. The single announcer's tinny transistor voice eerily echoed along the beach. All activities and conversation completely stopped; no one spoke ... as we all looked up at the moon. Seconds, minutes went by as we all listened.

Someone began to clap, then a cheer rolled along the beach, and the entire lakefront of strangers celebrated as one. I had goosebumps. I wanted to be an astronaut.

How do the young wish to govern?

What type of government do we want? Traditionalists look back 2,000 years or 3,000 years and seek to emulate the past and seldom use history to learn.

When talk show host Dick Cavett asked musician Jimi Hendrix about criticism he had received for his spirited rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner" at Woodstock, Jimi said he thought it was beautiful. "Don't you find that there's a certain mad beauty in unorthodoxy?" Jimi howled, "Yes!"

I used to dream about founding my own country. As a hypothetical, what type of government would my merry band of pranksters and I choose?

I think it would be a huge government, one that would represent 300 million people. I think it would be a small government, so that no one person could abuse his or her power. In fact, I don't think it would have an executive branch at all. Most likely, I would choose a tricameral legislative body. One branch would represent direct voting by the people. Then there'd be a House and Senate. I would keep the Supreme Court the way it is.

Are these pipe dreams? For the older generation, yes. But for the liberal millennials and the even more liberal Generation Z, these are questions we will have to consider as time moves on.

How will we respect nation-state sovereignty while increasing international authority so that all nations must respect the rule of law and their citizens' rights? How will we avoid the battles of "Star Wars" and steer our ship of state toward the enlightened governance of "Star Trek"? What do we want our future to look like? Because soon enough, the future will be ours.

Policing approach needs overhaul

Back in the 1960s and '70s, the notion of community policing first emerged. The goal shifted from strictly crime fighting to that of improving the overall quality of life for citizens, in addition to making people feel safer in their neighborhoods. Basically, it established a partnership between the community and the local police, and it required some fairly significant operational changes.

Some examples included increased foot patrols, individual problem-solving by patrol officers, local police substations and the establishment of police-community groups.

Today, the overall operational policy appears to be one of "zero tolerance." This includes the use of aggressive police tactics and full enforcement, even for relatively minor offenses. This has been the policy in New York City since the mid-1990s and also appears to be the case throughout much of the nation.

Attorney General William Barr has declined to prosecute the police officer who killed Eric Garner, this despite the Civil Rights Division's recommendation that the officer should be prosecuted. The very disturbing video of Garner being choked by Officer Daniel Pantaleo in 2014 has been widely circulated.

I am not an attorney, so I cannot speak to the legal reasons for Barr's decision. What we can do is examine why the overall cultural shift in policing occurred and what we should do moving forward.

Back during the Bush administration, the federal government decided to give surplus military equipment to local police departments. This included military weapons; even armored vehicles found their way into wealthy suburbs. Police uniforms began to look like tactical military attire. The message to the police? You are warriors operating in a war zone and must neutralize the enemy.

There seems to be a relationship among the militarization of community police departments, the adoption of zero policy policing strategies and the use of deadly force.

I have the utmost respect for police officers who put their lives at risk to protect us. What I suggest is a paradigm shift: reintroducing nonviolent de-escalation techniques as a first-line intervention when attempting to stabilize a situation. Deadly force should be used only when there is imminent risk of harm.

Consider an updated policy of community policing with an emphasis on improved police community relations, including more foot and bicycle patrols. Become familiar with the residents in your patrol areas. Consider joint community/police anti-crime campaigns. Promote more police-community forums and activities.

All life is precious and of value; protecting and preserving life should be the ultimate goal for everyone.

— Greg Newlin, Aurora

CHICAGO POLICE

Two Chicago police officers, left, aim weapons at Laquan McDonald in an image from the dashcam video that Chicago officials released after the October 2014 fatal shooting of the 17-year-old.

A decisive epilogue to the Laquan McDonald case

Yes, Chicago will punish police misconduct

The 2014 killing of Laquan McDonald by Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke was not, in the end, covered up or forgotten. The police dashcam video of the incident, when finally released, showed irrefutable evidence of wrongdoing.

As for how officers initially portrayed McDonald's death, well, choose your descriptor: lies, evasions, an instinctive effort to protect their own. It's not hard to imagine Van Dyke and others successfully evading scrutiny, given the Chicago Police Department's history of tolerating misconduct and discarding reforms.

Yet this police shooting turned out differently. It blew up the department. Under a federal consent decree, CPD now must overhaul the supervision and training of officers. Over time those locked-in reforms should improve the performance of officers who will be held accountable for their police work.

Van Dyke, who shot McDonald 16 times, is serving a 6 3/4-year sentence for murder. On Thursday, the Chicago Police Board fired four other members of the department for their actions related to the shooting. The board said Officers Ricardo Viramontes and Janet Mondragon and Sgt. Stephen Franko violated rules, including making false statements about what happened. Officer Daphne Sebastian brought discredit to the department, the board said.

The video, which played a large role in Van Dyke's conviction, showed the officer exit his vehicle as McDonald, a black teen armed with a knife, walked away. Within seconds Van Dyke began shooting. He continued to fire after McDonald fell to the pavement. The version of events put forth by Van Dyke and other officers on the scene made McDonald the aggressor, even as he was riddled with bullets. Sebastian said McDonald continued to move after being shot. Viramontes said McDonald tried to get up with the knife in his hand.

Here's part of what the Police Board said: The three officers, who were on the scene of the shooting, were either lying or shading the truth. "Put simply, the officers wanted to help their fellow officer and so described the incident in a way to put him in the best possible light." Franko, the sergeant, approved reports that contained falsehoods.

The McDonald killing shocked Chicagoans. But what exactly did it reveal? There's a parlor game to be played about whether attempts to cover up or explain away Van Dyke's reckless violence reflect a broader code of silence in the department. In 2015, Mayor Rahm Emanuel — under intense political pressure — said as much.

The phrase fits. We've seen enough police misconduct to recognize an element of CPD culture exists to protect rogue officers. Yet three officers were acquitted on charges alleging a cover-up of the McDonald murder. The Police Board's decision helps counteract the impression left by the acquittals.

There are at least two hoped-for legacies of McDonald's murder by a Chicago police officer. The first is that such an indefensible act is never repeated. The second is that any officer who does violate CPD regulations or the law will face consequences. Chicagoans deserve a police force they can trust. The Police Board's decision to fire three officers and a sergeant helps.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

In a CNN survey, only 21 percent of all Americans said they preferred a national health-care plan that would eliminate private insurance. Such results have prompted alarm from many Democrats — especially but not exclusively centrists — that running in 2020 on a platform of eliminating private insurance could neutralize the advantage Democrats have achieved on health care by defending the Affordable Care Act.

"You remember what the pushback was when Barack Obama said, 'If you like your insurance, you can keep it'? And a couple million people lost their insurance because they had plans that didn't meet the standards?" Sen. Michael Bennet asked on the liberal podcast Pod Save America. "Imagine a world where our offer is, 'If you like your insurance, we're going to take it away from you.' We just have got to beat Donald Trump at the end of the day here. And so we have to have an agenda that is going to appeal to the American people." ...

Fully 181 million Americans receive health coverage through their employers, according to census figures. Employer-provided coverage is the source of insurance for the vast majority of well-educated voters on whom Democrats now rely: Three-fourths of those with a two-year college degree, 87 percent of those with a four-year degree, and 90 percent of those with graduate education all receive their coverage at work. At least three-fourths of adults are covered through work in a wide array of the white-collar suburban districts that drove the Democratic recapture of the House last fall.

GREGG GILMAN

Jamila Tyler, Ashlyn Lozano and Amber Sallis in "Pomona" at Steep Theatre, playing through Aug. 24.

BY CHRIS JONES

Alastair McDowall's deeply disturbing and utterly riveting "Pomona," now the stuff of nightmares thanks to director Robin Witt and the most fearless theater in town, really begins with a story about chicken nuggets.

There is a man and a woman in a car in Manchester, England. The desperate Ollie (Amber Sallis) is trying to find her missing sister and senses that this man, a Trumpian (or aldermanic) Mr. Big, of sorts, might know something about her twin's fate. He first recounts the narrative of the movie "Raiders of the Lost Ark," even though his companion has, like almost everyone, seen the darn thing. There is, incidentally, an alien in the back seat of the car.

And then this man, played by Peter Moore, starts to riff on chicken nuggets: He eats a hundred a day here in his car, he says, and he is curious about their manufacture. He well knows that all he has to do is type the question into his phone. But does he want to know? Will that new information actually make the consumption of the aforementioned nuggets more enjoyable? No, he has determined, further inquiries most likely would only compromise his well-being.

"Pomona," a big hit in London and seen here for the first time in Chicago, is an exceptionally complex work with the kind of storytelling that will appeal to those who like escape rooms or role playing or thrillers. I lay in bed last night trying fully to figure it out. True, a lot of its mysteries do reveal themselves before you leave the theater, because McDowall, one of Britain's most exciting young writers, cleverly lays out the story before he reveals the narrative device underneath (imagine a story within a story where you get the creme long before the egg). Nothing unspools in an obvious chronology, though, and, as I left the theater after the opening, several bemused Tribune readers (and Steep fans) wished me luck in offering up any kind of explanation.

I think the chicken nuggets matter more, because "Pomona" is, in the final analysis, an indictment of our collective tendency to bury our heads in the sand, refusing to stand against the evils in our midst. The play really allows you to insert your own cause — the environment, nascent fascism, nascent anarchy, totalitarian dictatorships, corruption, inhumanity — while exploring our predilection to go along to get along, a criticism I often level at myself. On a deeper level, I think, McDowall is also writing about the vanishing of human intimacy, the technology-fueled dehumanization that is causing demagogues to rise as we forget how to feel empathy for our fellow traveler.

That deficit, surely, is our biggest current crisis. In fact, if you want to see a play that captures the horrors of this moment, this is your show. If you want to face these issues.

Time and time again in this play, and utilizing a variety of rhetorical conceits, characters express a desire to eradicate their corrupt city and just start over. Manchester happens to be the town of my birth and I love the place as I do Chicago, where I've spent all my adulthood; but I understand. And, frankly, it could be anywhere humans gather. It could be a country as well as a city. But there are no re-dos in our firmament.

I'll stop there with the plot, which is best experienced in real time. I would not want all this talk of chicken nuggets, though, to obscure the amount of violence in a play that clearly disturbed some in the audience on Thursday and might well be triggering (which is not a word I'd use without cause). Please be warned. I would imagine this is the smallest theater in which "Pomona" ever has been produced and some of it is hard to stand.

Witt's actors go for broke for 100 minutes: The work here is uniformly strong but the stuff you see from Ashlyn Lozano (playing a laconic woman under extreme duress), Nate Faust (whose character embodies atrophied masculinity) and the fabulous Sallis (who has to do way more than you first think) is especially impressive. Brandon Rivera, whose young security guard offers what passes for hope in this depressing work, is like a faltering beacon. He show us what it means for your humanity slowly to be sucked away.

If you follow British or Irish playwrights, you'll see the precedents for a poetic play that struck me as half Sarah Kane, half Martin McDonagh, with a dash of Philip Ridley in there too. The piece owes something to "The Pillowman," but is much less fun. Understandably. Things haven't improved, have they?

Rainbows before noon

A lovely, retro-chic 75-minute daytime musical playing at Chicago Shakespeare Theater

BY CHRIS JONES

For years now, Chicago Shakespeare Theater has been producing daytime musicals during the summer, designed to tempt families indoors from the heat of a stroll down our city's most popular promontory. With only a few exceptions, these 75-minute shows have far exceeded the quality of what you'd see in a theme-park destination elsewhere in our nation. This is important. For many people, they are a first foray into Chicago theater.

And where else can you see no less than Hollis Resnik — once Fantine in "Les Miserables" — play the Wicked Witch of the West at an hour when the only acceptable cocktail is a Bloody Mary?

I caught "The Wizard of Oz" the other morning alongside a full house of summer campers, all bursting with energy and yet also perfectly willing to sit and listen to "Over the Rainbow." And, for my money, listening to a singer of the quality of Leryn Turlington warble that most exquisite of ditties beats sitting in any Starbucks, or, Oz knows, my office. How did Harold Arlen get that level of emotional engagement out of just a few notes? Is it the way they are arranged? How desire builds therein? Or is just simple longing? I thought about talking to the big kid next to me about that, but I decided it would be too weird.

What you are seeing here is what is known in the trade as "The Wizard of Oz, Junior," or something like that. As musical stagings go, "The Wizard of Oz, Senior" was never any great theatrical shakes, and in the cut-back version, Dorothy gets whisked out of Kansas and sent off down that Yellow Brick Road alongside her scarecrow (Marya Grandy), Tin Man (Joseph Anthony Byrd) and Cowardly Lion (Jose Antonio Garcia) quicker than an Elton John costume change. There aren't any surprises in director Brian Hill's production, but thanks in no small part to Emily Rohm, who now has graduated to Aunt Em, the emotional resonance survives the rush. Dorothy's destination is William Dick's Wizard, who is perfectly disappointing, as he should be.

orchestrations from Neil Bartram. But the greatest assets of the show are really classy visuals, in a kind of retro-1940s vibe, that really fit the material. There's a sepia-toned theatricality to Scott Davis' setting and the costumes from Theresa Ham are a blend of the familiar and the wittily progressive. The choreography here is by the great Kenny Ingram, and he sure packs a lot of hugely enjoyable (and well-executed) steps into 75 minutes, far more than we have the right to expect, really.

That work is in the same 1940s palette too, so there is plenty here for all generations to enjoy together before hitting the food court and returning to quotidian points Midwestern, where all the wizards are fools.

ASK AMY

By AMY DICKINSON

Single mom should find pals like kid

Dear Amy: My husband left me five years ago. I am now a divorced single mom with two beautiful children, ages 10 and 8.

I am also an only child and am fairly introverted, which makes it difficult for me to make new friends.

I find it so hard when I see other happy families together, I want nothing more than to have someone (the right someone) to share my life with. I envision myself growing old with no one but a dog around for company.

I am a fun person! But I am not a social butterfly ... and I am not into dating online. The only people I hang around with are my parents, and I think they are getting bored with me.

I don't want to appear desperate, but seriously, Amy, how do adults in their 40s make friends? It was so much easier when you were little and could just walk up to someone and ask, "Hey, do you want to be friends?"

— Lonely

Dear Lonely: You mention a dog as something of a worst-case scenario, but my first suggestion is that if you don't have one, you should consider adopting a compatible canine pal.

Yes, dogs are awesome comforters and companions, but dogs are also people magnets.

You describe yourself as an introvert who also wants to meet new friends, and one great aspect of having a dog in your life is that a dog will serve as both a conversation starter and a focal point while two or more humans are glancing their way toward a connection. When you have a dog with you, you don't have to make eye contact with another human — until you are ready. The dog soaks up all of that otherwise awkward attention.

You should also do your best to connect with other parents, especially single moms. Other divorced parents will understand your needs and challenges.

And, to answer your last concern, one of my (now) closest friends first walked up to me in our daughters' kindergarten class and said, "You seem nice. Do you want to be friends?" Rocking it kindergarten-style!

Dear Amy: I'm divorcing my narcissistic husband. He's medically retired and stays at home all day while I work. I pay all of the household bills. He's now stating I have two decisions. 1: Buy him out of the house, which he paid nothing toward. 2: Put it up for sale and split the proceeds.

I want to keep the house to get it ready to sell next year. I'm barely making ends meet, as I had to take a lower-paying job when I was laid off of my previous job. He's never offered to pick up anything financially, except to pay for food on occasion.

I'm feeling like I should sell the place as cheaply as possible so he doesn't get anything. I put $50,000 from my 401(k) as a down payment, which I'll never get back.

Any thoughts on how to deal with this situation? I'm stuck in a house with a vindictive man who just wants me to suffer.

— Lost and Broken

Dear Lost: Your husband does not get to dictate the terms of your divorce. The laws in your state will spell out fairly clearly your options regarding your property. Much depends on whether you live in a community property state or an equitable distribution state.

Do some research regarding the divorce laws in your state and hire a competent attorney to help you make the choice that would benefit you the most.

In my view, lowballing the value of your house in order to punish your husband financially is not an appropriate approach. But lowballing the value of your house in order to sell it quickly and restart your life might be the right thing for you to do.

Dear Amy: I could relate to the letter from "Tired Mom," who was so worn out dealing with her youngest teen daughter.

My husband and I also struggled with a "mouthy" teenage daughter (youngest of our four). In therapy, she basically said that she felt like the least valuable member of our family.

She is lovely, smart, had nice friends, and an intact family that loved her. It broke my heart. And during that time God told me to stop fighting WITH her and start fighting FOR her. It changed everything.

— Mary Beth

Dear Mary Beth: This is beautiful, and so very valuable. Many parents will benefit from your wisdom.

North's leap to slam was a bold move. It's the kind of bid one might make if his team is trailing near the end of a match. It might create a swing that leads to a comeback victory.

The easiest route to 12 tricks would be three club ruffs in dummy. West's inspired trump lead prevented that. A 3-3 spade split combined with two club ruffs might also do it. Rather than just relying on that, South decided to see if dummy's hearts could be established.

The bidding:

the king of diamonds. Declarer crossed to dummy with the ace of spades and led another heart. When East discarded a club, declarer did the same, allowing West to win the trick. This was a good play, as South would have lost trump control if he ruffed. West exited with a trump, which South was able to win with dummy's nine, thanks to his foresight in ruffing hearts with high trumps.

One more heart high established the suit. South drew the last trump and crossed to dummy with the king of spades to discard his remaining losers on the good hearts. Well played!

Rizzo's grand slam keys victory, fulfills promise to 9-year-old

BY PHIL THOMPSON

Joe Maddon has been looking for more offense against left-handers, dropping Anthony Rizzo's name among several of his hitters, and Rizzo didn't take long to accommodate him.

On a steamy Friday afternoon, the Cubs first baseman hit his fourth career grand slam with a 366-foot, third-inning blast to left-center field off Padres lefty Eric Lauer to stake the Cubs to a 4-3 lead en route to a 6-5 victory.

What's more, Rizzo made good on a promise to 9-year-old Matteo Lambert of Vienna, Va., who is attempting to run 33 races in 15 states to support kids with cancer. Lambert visited with Rizzo in the dugout Friday and is set to run the Rock 'n' Roll 5K on Saturday in Grant Park.

"I asked Anthony Rizzo to hit a moonshot for kids with cancer," Lambert posted on Facebook. "He told me he would and just smashed a go ahead grand slam home run!"

"That was for him," Rizzo said. "That's really special of him to come and hang out here. ... It's a 9-year-old going out of his way to run for kids with cancer; he's completely healthy. It's amazing to see little kids giving back like that, how much he cares and what a heart he has."

The Cubs showed some heart to come away with a win in a "very sloppy game for both sides," Maddon said. "I can't defend that. It

Stellar linebacker play, brutal truth as analyst made him local legend

BY WILL LARKIN

The love affair between Bears fans and Doug Buffone lasted nearly 50 years.

From the time he was drafted in the fourth round out of Louisville in 1966 to when he died of natural causes at 70 on April 20, 2015, perhaps no Bear connected with Chicago fans the way Buffone did. He played 14 years at linebacker for mostly terrible teams, then spent more than 30 on the radio analyzing teams that often were just as bad.

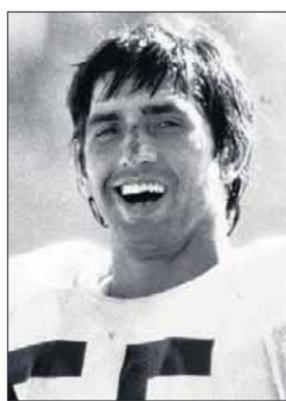

His attitude about football and life, though, made Buffone a legend in Chicago.

"Not only a great football player, a great person on the radio, but more than anything, just a great individual," WSCR-AM program director Mitch Rosen told the Tribune's Fred Mitchell and Peter Nickeas on April 21, 2015. "Somebody that everybody loved. When you met Doug Buffone, you fell in love with him."

Shortly after sports radio came to Chicago full time with The Score in 1992, Buffone became the voice of Bears fans. His co-hosts included Mike North, former Bears teammate Dan Jiggetts and former Bulls star Norm Van Lier, but his best work came on Bears postgame shows with Ed O'Bradovich.

Each Bears loss from 1992 to 2014 had a silver lining: listening to Buffone find creative ways to

"I just laughed," he said.

Eight teams were listed under "BEST CHANCE TO WIN BIG TEN," according to ESPN's Football Power Index.

The list began with Michigan (48.3 percent) and ended with Wisconsin (1.5 percent). Anyone missing? "Based on what we did last year, you'd think there'd be some respect there," Thomas said. "But we know nothing is given, it's earned."

BLACKHAWKS

Future appears quite bright

Ist-rounders Boqvist and Dach steal the show at scrimmage to close development camp

BY JIMMY GREENFIELD

The Blackhawks no longer have multiple scrimmages during development camp, which may be smart for the organization but isn't as much fun for fans.

Especially when they have prospects as talented as Adam Boqvist and Kirby Dach, their last two first-round picks.

Here are some takeaways from Friday's scrimmage, which marked the end of this year's camp:

1. Boqvist was the best player on the ice: From the moment Boqvist arrived at development camp this year — his second since getting drafted No. 8 overall in 2018 — he displayed a comfort level with his teammates and on the ice that wasn't there when he arrived last year as a wide-eyed 17-year-old.

Friday's scrimmage was more of a coming-out party for Boqvist, who left the crowd slackjawed early when he stickhandled through Joshua Ess, then somehow zipped a pass through the skates of Jakub Galvas to Josiah Slavin on the other side of the ice for a goal into a wide-open net.

"I have no idea (how I did that)," Boqvist said. "It just happened. I'm just trying to not think about (the) play. It's in my bag. So just play."

It was a brilliant move that he would have a hard time executing against NHL defense-men. When will that chance come? The Hawks don't have room on the NHL roster right now for Boqvist, who has to improve his defense and avoid mistakes. He had a couple of careless turnovers, including one that led to a breakaway goal by Dach.

2. Dach was not far behind: While Boqvist showed his flare for the spectacular, Dach put on a display of sheer power.

Granted, on his goal after Boqvist's turnover, he only had to outmuscle 5-foot-8, 161-pound Logan Ommen to secure a breakaway that he finished with a sweet deke. Dach's second goal was more impressive as he zigzagged around helpless defenders during 3-on-3 time before giving up the puck, then getting it back in front of the net and using his big body and long reach to whip the puck into the net.

"It's natural for me with my longer reach to do that and pull the goalie to one side and reach around him," the 6-4 Dach said. "I have that extra length in my stick and my arms, so it's something I've done for a long time. It seems to work, but I'm sure goalies are going to start to catch on and I'm going to have to come up with something new."

Defenseman Adam Boqvist, who was selected eighth overall in 2018, shined during the Blackhawks development camp, which ended Friday.

The goals were memorable, but Dach had an equally outstanding defensive play when he chased down Michal Těplý on a breakaway and seamlessly stripped him of the puck.

3. Nylander didn't do much — and that's OK: Short of making the Hawks roster, which is not a given, the best thing that can happen to Nylander when the regular season starts is that Henri Jokiharju somehow doesn't make the Sabres roster.

Because every good game Jokiharju has for the Sabres will put more pressure on Nylander to start producing for the Hawks. Fans on social media were already getting on his case for not having a particularly strong scrimmage, at least at the start.

Nylander showed how strong he can be when he won a puck battle in the corner, then carried the puck out to Ian Mitchell, who sent a pass through the slot to Mathias Fröm for a goal.

"There's obviously pressure, but it's not something I try to think about," Nylander said. "I'm just going to work hard when I go home now like I always have and be ready for training camp. I want to prove to them (I deserve) a spot on the roster, which I can do if I put in the time and the work when I come back to Sweden. Just going to be a lot of fun coming back here."

4. Assessing the rest of the 2019 draft class: Besides Dach, the Hawks had the other five members of their recent draft class in camp: Alex Vlasic (second round), Těplý (fourth), Antti Saarela (fourth), Dominic Basse (sixth) and Cole Moberg (seventh).

At 6-6, Vlasic stood out during drills throughout the week, but he wasn't particularly noticeable during the scrimmage. The best play among them came from Těplý, who sent a long pass to a streaking Josiah Slavin for the game-winning goal on a breakaway with 6.9 seconds left.

It's a raw group that has a long way to go to reach the NHL, which can be said for most players drafted after the first round.

"All of those guys that we drafted a few weeks ago came here this week and performed really well," Eaton said. "They engaged guys off the ice, they were eager in the workshop settings and then on the ice as well. They were great kids."

Cats not among favorites

West.

Fitzgerald sometimes seems a little salty about the lack of acknowledgement of his program's accomplishments.

"It's always fun to read this time of year how we stink," he said. "I should actually get better at golf because I don't know why I coach. I should just golf. Haven't experienced (a free) August since 1984. So maybe I should start doing that."

Last season Northwestern was a 50-1 shot to win the Big Ten. The Wildcats went 8-1 in Big Ten play and put up a fight in the conference title game, trailing Ohio State by three late in the third quarter before the Buckeyes pulled away 45-24.

Northwestern is a 39-1 prayer to win the conference this season. Seven teams have lower odds, starting with Ohio State (even money at 1-1) and Michigan (2-1). Indiana (42-1) comes after the Wildcats.

So is all of this more annoying or amusing?

"At this point in my career," defensive end Joe Gaziano said, "it's a little amusing. This is something I've dealt with for five years now. Northwestern is the underdog; we have that mentality. We have our expectations, and if other people don't believe in that, that's their problem.

"We're not looking for preseason rankings. We're looking for postseason results."

The 2018 Wildcats started 1-3 with a hideous home loss to Akron and a squeaker against Michigan. They went 8-2 after that, falling only to Notre Dame and Ohio State.

That team lost six starters on offense: quarterback Clayton Thorson, receiver Flynn Nagel, superback Cam Green and linemen J.B. Butler, Tommy Doles and Blake Hance.

Key players gone from the other side are defensive backs Montre Hartage, Trae Williams and Jared McGee, linebacker Nate Hall and tackle Jordan Thompson. The defense returns its top six tacklers, including Gaziano, the nation's active career sacks leader with 21; All-America candidate Paddy Fisher; and Fisher's fellow linebacker Blake Gallagher, the team's top returning tackler.

The offense returns five starters and quarterback TJ Green, who attempted 36 passes last season. Hunter Johnson, the former five-star recruit who transferred from Clemson, is expected to win the job.

Fitzgerald plans to keep the identity of the starter secret until just before the Aug. 31 opener at Stanford. Last year the public didn't know Thorson and Green would share reps at Purdue, and the Wildcats eked out a 31-27 win.

Despite all of those victories, the media, the betting public and computers are not bullish on the 2019 Wildcats.

"Personally, I do not care," Fisher said. "Make all the predictions you want. It's all right. Just chop it up, make it wood and throw it in the fire."

To Harbaugh, Meyer is gone but not forgotten

Michigan coach fuels rivalry with former Ohio St. counterpart

Looming around Michigan coach Jim Harbaugh at Big Ten media days Friday was the man who wasn't there.

Harbaugh's tenure has been marked by four losses to Ohio State and former coach Urban Meyer, including last season's 62-39 rout. With Meyer stepping down, the big question heading into the season is whether Harbaugh and Michigan finally can ascend to the top of the conference now that Meyer isn't around.

At least not in person.

Harbaugh invited Meyer's shadow to hang around him by going on a podcast shortly before Big Ten media days and taking a dig — though not an inaccurate one — at Meyer.

Speaking on The Athletic's Tim Kawakami's podcast, Harbaugh said: "Urban Meyer's had a winning record, really phenomenal record everywhere he's been. But also, controversy follows everywhere he's been."

Asked to elaborate Friday at the Hilton Chicago, Harbaugh told reporters: "No context. I don't think it was anything new or anything of a bombshell. It was things many of you all understand and have written about."

He later said his comment was a fact-based discussion point and not poking the bear. (He also claimed he wasn't familiar with that expression because he's not into "animal analogies." This came minutes after he hissed like a viper and made a fangs sign with his fingers.)

"I don't see why people are so afraid to say what they think," he said. "Maybe that's something that needs examined. It was me saying what I think."

Meyer was suspended for the first three games of the 2018 season as Ohio State investigated what Meyer knew — and when — about domestic violence allegations against former assistant coach Zach Smith. Meyer was reinstated and guided the Buckeyes to a 13-1 record, the conference title and a Rose Bowl victory.

Even without Meyer on the sideline this season, the historic rivalry continues. Clearly Harbaugh added fuel, and it didn't go unnoticed by the Meyer family.

"Wait guys maybe this is a deflection strategy!" his daughter Nicki Meyer Dennis tweeted. "Throw a little mud to avoid answering why you always lost. #Respect-TheRivalry 7-OH (0-4 lol)"

This seems to be the year for Harbaugh to make it happen.

Conference media picked Michigan to

SHANNON RYAN
On the Big Ten

win the Big Ten — a prediction Harbaugh embraced. It would be the Wolverines' first conference title since 2004.

"That's where I would pick us," he said. "I feel like our team is in a really good place. (We have a) young, enthusiastic team with players with a lot of good experience. I feel really good about our coaching staff, and like

I said, I feel like it's good, it's tight and we're proceeding on a daily basis to make it even tighter, even better.

"To win the Big Ten championship, qualify for the playoffs, win the national championship, those are our goals. And then you put those to the back of the mind and focus on how you can achieve those. That's what we're trying to do better, focus on that day-to-day."

Then he dropped this Harbaugh-ism: "But like an anaconda, you want to just keep squeezing it tighter and making it better, and that's where our football team is."

The Wolverines need to avoid suffocating in big games. They open the Big Ten schedule Sept. 21 at Wisconsin and also visit Penn State before home games against Notre Dame, Michigan State and Ohio State.

Asked if Meyer's departure has helped clear a path for the Wolverines, Harbaugh stared quietly for eight seconds before saying, "Hmm?" He then said, "That's something I don't know."

He said the Wolverines have reflected on their loss to the Buckeyes and how to take a giant step to top of the conference.

"Understand, we welcome it," he said. "We've got to feed off it. You say pressure, we say, OK, let's see how much pressure we can apply. Those are the things we focus on; how can we get it over the top?"

Michigan will try to enliven its offense with new coordinator Josh Gattis, hired from Alabama. He'll be charged with keeping quarterback Shea Patterson on track after passing for 2,600 yards and 22 touchdowns in his first season since transferring from Mississippi.

Patterson is one of nine returning offensive starters, including four linemen. He will have two of the Big Ten's best receivers at his disposal in Nico Collins and Donovan Peoples-Jones.

The defense has holes to fill with the top three tacklers gone. But the key to a successful season, Harbaugh said, is focus.

"That's the goal. That's what drives you," he said. "That's what starts you off." That, and beating Ohio State.

was extraordinarily hot, and that can impact concentration.”

After the Padres tied the score at 5-5 in the top of the eighth on Josh Naylor's home run off Pedro Strop, the Cubs benefited from a pair of errors in the bottom half to bring in Addison Russell with the winning run.

Craig Kimbrel struck out the side in the ninth with one walk for his fifth save.

The grand slam was Rizzo's first home run since June 15 against the Dodgers' Kenley Jansen and his first grand slam since Aug. 16, 2017, against the Reds' Homer Bailey. All four of his slams have come at Wrigley.

Over his career, the left-handed-hitting Rizzo has shown almost as much power against lefties as righties (slugging .426 and .511, respectively, entering Friday), but there has been a much wider gap this season (.366 and .568).

Before the game, Maddon lamented the Cubs' last-place standing among NL teams with a .234 average against left-handers — “We've been terrible” — and noted, among other players, “even Rizz.”

“Look at Rizzo's numbers, they're down a bit — a lot actually,” Maddon said.

Lauer looked to have a short third inning when Jon Lester, who had his own early struggles on the mound, grounded into a double play.

But Albert Almora lined a single, Javier Baez slapped a grounder to short for an infield single and Kris Bryant walked on six pitches, setting the table for Rizzo to pounce on Lauer's 92 mph fastball.

Rizzo couldn't venture a guess

Addison Russell (27) claps his hands after scoring on an error in the eighth inning of Friday's game. Russell finished the day 0-for-4.

as to why lefties have had success against him and other Cubs hitters but said: “It will be nice to see another lefty tomorrow (the Padres' Joey Lucchesi). I'm sure we'll face another lefty or two in San Francisco. We don't see them a lot regularly, so when we do, it's good to get our at-bats on them.”

Rizzo extended his hitting streak to 10 games, and Maddon said he was due to rediscover his power. But Maddon is looking for more, and not just from Rizzo. The Cubs got six hits in Lauer's 4²/₃ innings but also struck out seven times.

“There's another level of us that I want to see,” Maddon said. “We've got to hit lefties, man. That's a big part, moving down the road.”

Lester gutted through six sweltering innings, weathering some early trouble in the first and striking out Manny Machado with a man on second to end the sixth.

When Lester deviated somewhat from the game plan and tried to attack Machado with a cutter in the third, Machado hit a two-run homer to left-center.

“So we went right back to where we wanted to go from the beginning,” Lester said, “which was down and away and got a swing and miss on a changeup.”

Said Maddon: “Give Jonny Lester some credit for hanging in there, man. That (was a) big strikeout on Machado.”

CUBS NOTES

Weather even hotter than Cubs

BY PHIL THOMPSON

While the Cubs continued their second-half hot streak Friday, winning for the sixth time in seven games, players and fans alike tried to stay cool with a game-time temperature of 92 degrees and a heat index of 106.

“It was miserable, but we were all out there playing together,” starting pitcher Jon Lester said. “It's not like I'm the only one standing out there. It's something you can't control, can't worry about. Just try to make pitches.”

Wrigley Field staff and the large video board in left field directed fans to cooling and misting centers and places to find complimentary water and ice packs.

“Everybody was melting,” manager Joe Maddon said. “It was scorching hot.”

First baseman Anthony Rizzo, a South Florida native, stood in defiance of the thermometer, wearing long sleeves under his jersey as usual.

“It was hot, but you play in all weather,” Rizzo said. “I like the heat. Nice and sweaty, so I like to sweat.”

Edwards returns: The Cubs activated reliever Carl Edwards Jr. — out since June 13 with a thoracic strain to his left (non-throwing) shoulder — from the 10-day injured list.

During four rehab outings with Triple-A Iowa, Edwards said he focused on “just making sure my shoulder's good.”

“I feel like I've done enough so far mentally,” he said. “I don't want to run myself crazy. ... I feel like (the pain) is pretty much over with.”

The Cubs optioned left-hander Randy Rosario (5.91 ERA) to Iowa.

“Rosey was just here and did OK,” Maddon said. “Kyle's been outstanding. It's always nice to have more than one (left-hander), I can't deny that, but when Carl is right, he's able to mitigate all that.”

Edwards has a 9.64 ERA against 21 lefty batters this season, but last year he had a 1.80 ERA against them. Against all batters, he's 1-1 with a 5.40 ERA in 19 appearances this season.

Extra innings: Catcher Willson Contreras (right foot strain) resumed baseball activities. “He's doing well,” Maddon said. “I haven't heard anything about a setback. He comes and gives me that hug in the dugout.” ... Cole Hamels will throw a bullpen session, his second, either Saturday or Sunday. The left-hander has been out of the rotation since suffering a left oblique strain June 28. ... Maddon said after the game he will stick with the current five-man rotation, so Alec Mills, who had a six-strikeout season debut Tuesday, is on track to start Monday in San Francisco.

WHITE SOX

WHITE SOX AT RAYS

Colome has always been open to closing

Veteran reliever says pressure-packed role is ‘something that fits me’

BY LAMOND POPE

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Alex Colome initially thought the Rays would use him as a reliever. But Alex Cobb had an injured finger, which opened an opportunity for Colome to start.

He was scheduled to make his major-league debut May 30, 2013, against the Marlins, and in preparation for pitching at a National League park, Colome took batting practice. That led to some concern.

“I'm bunting and my hand got a cramp,” Colome said through an interpreter Thursday. “I didn't have a good feeling.”

It didn't slow him down. Colome allowed one unearned run on five hits and struck out seven in 5²/₃ innings to get the win.

“I battled through it,” Colome said. “I did well.”

Colome appeared in 281 games for the Rays from 2013 to '18. He looked back on his time with the team Friday as he returned to Tropicana Field with the White Sox for a three-game series.

“I feel very grateful about Tampa and the city and the team,” Colome said. “The fans treated me very well. The organization treated me very well. It's always exciting to go back.”

Colome, 30, developed into a reliable closer for the Rays. He has continued in that role with the Sox.

“He's kind of made for it,” Sox manager Rick Renteria said. “The makeup that he carries with him puts him in a really good position. That's what's allowed him to be as effective as he's been this year. He's been very very good for us.”

He's been almost automatic, converting 20 of 21 save opportunities.

“Having the opportunity to be the closer, to be that guy in the ninth inning with the game on the line, is something that fits me,” Colome said. “All the adrenaline, I can use that to my advantage.”

Colome is tied for fourth in the American League in saves. He has allowed just two runs in his 21 save opportunities.

“What makes him so good as a closer is there's no situation too big for him,” catcher James McCann said.

Colome made 19 starts from 2013 to '15. That included 13 starts in 2015 in which he went 3-4 with a 4.70 ERA. He was 5-1 with a 2.66 ERA in 30 relief appearances that season.

Colome adapted well to closing, converting 37 of 40 saves in 2016 and making the AL All-Star team. He led the majors with 47 saves in 2017.

The Rays traded him to the Mariners on May 25, 2018. He returned to face his former teammates later that season.

“It was kind of weird and different,” Colome said. “I had a lot of emotions because it was the organization that gave me the chance to play professionally, to come to the majors. I'm always going to be thankful because of all the things they did for me.”

He learned a lot going through that trade process. It's coming in handy again as a potential target with the trade deadline looming.

“I learned to be as positive as you can,” Colome said. “I was with the Rays my whole career. At the time they traded me, I was closing games.”

“When they traded me, I went to Seattle and I was to be the setup guy. It was different. I wasn't used to it, but I kept my positiveness.”

The Mariners traded Colome to the Sox for Omar Narvaez on Nov. 30. He is enjoying his latest chapter.

“All the guys are good guys,” Colome said. “I always try to learn from them too because every day you have the chance to learn something. You are in a constantly learning process.”

“The atmosphere and the camaraderie that we have here is good. I like to spend my days with them and to learn from them. I always try to help them to learn a little bit. It's always a fun time when you have that feeling.”

Back with Sox, Engel seeks offensive uptick

BY LAMOND POPE

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — White Sox manager Rick Renteria praised center fielder Adam Engel's defense before Friday night's game against the Rays.

“We've always loved his defensive prowess,” Renteria said. “One of the things we talked about when we sent him out (to Triple-A Charlotte on May 5) was we wanted his offensive game to coincide with his defensive game.”

Engel will get a chance to show whether he has made that improvement. The Sox recalled him from Charlotte and he was in the lineup at Tropicana Field, hitting ninth.

“Initially, when you get sent down, it's not something that you want to have happen to a career path,” Engel said. “You don't want to go backward. It takes a little bit to pick yourself back up. It's part of what we do. When something bad happens, you've got to find a way to pick yourself back up.”

“So I did that as quickly as I could and tried to accomplish some of the goals that I needed to accomplish in order to be a good player at the major-league level. You never know what your future quite holds in this game. Just put your work in every day, and I truly believe if you're good enough, you'll find your way back.”

Engel rejoins the Sox after they optioned outfielder Charlie Tilson to Charlotte on Thursday.

“(We want Engel to) use the tools that he has to be able to put the ball in play,” Renteria said, “bunt, steal bases, use all the tools that he brings to the table with him and allow us an opportunity to see if we can take advantage of it in the big scheme of things.”

Engel was batting .212 with two doubles, one triple, one home run and four RBIs in 26 games when the Sox sent him down. He hit .270 with 13 doubles, four triples, nine homers, 29 RBIs and 13 stolen bases in 64 games with the Knights.

“I learned a lot over those two months,” Engel said. “Just getting at-bats every day is something that all players want. Unfortunately, it was in the minors. But ... I had an incredible opportunity to work on what I needed to work on.”

“Coming back up this time, I've worked on some things that I hadn't really gotten a chance to work on in the past, so I'm excited to apply it up here.”

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Doug Buffone, left, and Ed O'Bradovich talk about the Bears' 51-23 loss to the Patriots in 2014 during their postgame radio show. Buffone was known for his brutal honesty.

Buffone a stellar LB, brutally honest analyst describe his disgust with what he just watched. His partnership with O'Bradovich — another beloved former Bear who didn't mince words — found both men finding their groove as their blood pressure increased.

Sometimes Buffone's words were fiery: "I want somebody to get kicked in the ass!" or "These guys couldn't play dead!" Sometimes they came out jumbled: "You better have a damn good fullback," or "It's gonna be the best... whatever... since sliced breast."

He could sum up the feelings of a fan base in one sentence: "I could have gone to Rush Street last night and found 24 players who could do better." "I'd rather spend a weekend in jail than watch this game again."

Bad Bears teams were "tomato cans" and "soft as a grape." Callers he disagreed with were advised to "stop yourself!"

We never found out why hitting a bull in the ass with a banjo would be a good thing, but thanks to Buffone we learned that Caleb Hanie not being able to do so was an indictment of his quarterback skills.

Intentionally or not, Buffone was so funny he could make listeners laugh until they cried. His words always came from the heart, though.

"I don't mind you getting beat; I got my ass whipped many times," Buffone said in an impassioned rant after one loss. "But I tell you, I took somebody down with me. That's what I want to see! Not today... You are a professional team! Act like one for God's sakes!"

The Tribune's David Haugh wrote on April 21, 2015: "If the late Ron Santo was beloved in the city for always putting a positive spin on the Cubs, Buffone built his popularity on the basis of brutal honesty analyzing his beloved Bears. ... He harshly criticized the Bears because, beneath all the bluster, he deeply loved the franchise."

As Buffone told the Tribune's Ed Sherman on Oct. 30, 2014, during his last season as postgame host: "I didn't play the trombone for 14 years. I played football. Don't give me this Kumbaya stuff and 'We'll try again next week.' You're trying to tell me I don't know what's going on? Even a moron would know after 14 years."

Buffone was part of plenty of losses — 116 of them in fact, against 80 victories in his 14 seasons. He was a Bear through some of their darkest days, including the franchise-worst 1-13 record in 1969.

He set a Bears record with 186 games played, a total that now ranks fifth behind Patrick Mannelly (245), Steve McMichael and Olin Kreutz (191 apiece) and Walter Payton (190). He still owns the team record — unlikely to be broken — by playing for five coaches: George Halas, Jim Dooley, Abe Gibron, Jack Pardee and Neill Armstrong.

Buffone's 24 interceptions are a Bears record for linebackers. His first three picks came against Bart Starr, Johnny Unitas and John Brodie; his final three came against Steve DeBerg, Dan Fouts and Steve Grogan. The Bears credit Buffone with 1,257 tackles — including more than 100 seven times — 10 fumble recoveries, nine forced fumbles and 37 sacks.

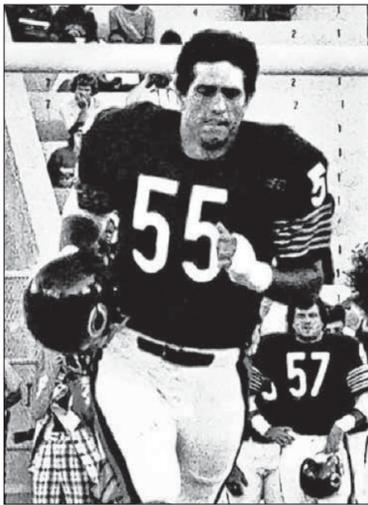

While the Bears' middle linebacker tradition — Bill George to Dick Butkus to Mike Singletary to Brian Urlacher — is well-known, their left outside linebacker streak also was impressive. Joe Fortunato, Buffone and Otis Wilson manned the position for all but a few years from 1955 to '87.

The 6-foot-3 Buffone was not a great athlete but kept himself in great shape; he weighed in at 222 pounds as a rookie and in his final season. In 1977 he became the first Bear to return from a torn Achilles tendon. During rehab he trained so vigorously that trainer Fred Caito and weight coach Clyde Emrich made him take 10 days off in February.

In a Dec. 9, 1977, story by the Tribune's Don Pierson, Emrich recounted telling Buffone: "You're driving me crazy, you're driving Freddie crazy and you're driving yourself crazy. Now get the hell out!"

That 1977 season saw the Bears return to the playoffs for the first time since the 1963 championship season. Buffone, a 12-year veteran, threw a wild party at his Bombay Bicycle Club on East Division Street. The celebration included dancing by the Honey Bears cheerleading squad and guard Revie Sorey controlling the tape deck. Sorey interrupted the disco hits of the day several times to play "Bear Down, Chicago Bears."

"Hell, I don't know what it cost," Buffone told the Tribune's John Husar on Dec. 20. "And I don't care. When you average it out over 12 years, it isn't that much."

Buffone's burgeoning career as a nightclub owner — he also ran Sweetwater and Hotspurs in Chicago, the Nickelbag in Schiller Park and Jubilation in Las Vegas — led many to wonder why the son of a coal miner from Yatesboro, Pa., kept coming back to the Bears as he reached his mid-30s.

In 1978 he relished the chance to set the team record by playing in his 162nd game, passing George.

"At first I took it lightly," he told Pierson on Oct. 13. "Then I got to thinking. All those names. Bronko Nagurski. Beattie Feathers."

Pierson pointed out that Feathers played only four seasons with the Bears.

"Yeah, but it's a great name."

Buffone always could find humor even in the bleakest moments. He recalled to Pierson on Dec. 15, 1979, an exhibition game 12 years earlier that the Bears lost 66-24 to the Chiefs. Buffone felt bad about the final score but worse for the white horse that ran laps around the field after each touchdown.

"I'll never forget that poor horse's tongue hanging out."

Ronnie Bull was a member of the 1963 championship team who later played four years with Buffone and couldn't help but be impressed by his attitude.

"Doug was always the kind of guy to have a big smile on his face," Bull told chicagobears.com after Buffone's death. "And that's the reason everybody liked him. Nobody had a bad word to say about Doug."

For his play and his personality, Bears fans adored Doug Buffone. He might have loved them even more.

"I always play for the fans," Buffone told the Tribune's Bill Jauss on Aug. 25, 1974. "I swear to God, they make me sky high. The year we were 1-13 we finished against Detroit in Wrigley Field, and they were cheering for us! I said, 'Doug, go all out for these people!'"

When Buffone came back for his final season in 1979, he was a battered 35-year-old with no starting position for the first time since he was a rookie. He just had to give it one more go.

"I happen to like to play this game," he told Pierson. "What the hell's wrong with that? The money's there and the money's fine, but maybe that isn't where it's all at. It's my life, my job, the thing I do best."

"I love it. What can I say?"

Moor, Gulliume 'Bill'

Bill Moor, referred to as Doc by so many of the young men he worked with in his long career as a psychologist, passed away on Monday, June 10th, after a short but intense illness. Born on March 7, 1943 and raised in a working class neighborhood of Chicago, with a heavy Lithuanian population, he was always loyal and proud of his cultural roots, but also came to embrace an extremely wide range of cultural interests.

After graduating from Roosevelt University, with a B.A. and two Master of Arts degrees, he attended Northwestern University and received a Ph.D. in Philosophy in 1972. He then obtained a Psy.D. from the Illinois School of Professional Psychology in 1979. Bill loved to learn, and did further study in philosophy, psychology, mathematics, and in Spanish language and culture, over the next several decades.

While completing his doctoral psychology studies, he met Elaine Lewitter. They married in September of 1978, and began sharing both a professional and personal life together.

Bill and Elaine shared strong and active cultural interests, attending, enjoying, and supporting the Lyric Opera, Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Joffrey Ballet and all kinds of theater.

After closing his practice and retiring, Bill put more time and upped his involvement in his personal interests, especially writing plays, acting and performance. A true polymath, Bill had recently completed writing a novel not long before his death and had become a gourmet cook.

An unusually accomplished individual, Bill will be remembered by past clients, colleagues, dear friends and neighbors in both his home and in Mexico for his strength of character, his ability to reach out to others, and his generosity. He is survived by Elaine, his wife of 40 years. Services were held privately.

Valaika, Barbara Carol 'Barb'

Barbara "Barb" Carol Valaika (Gilliland) was born November 2, 1941 and went to her final home on July 16, 2019. Barb, in her 77 years, was a faithful spouse, mother, grandmother and homemaker extraordinaire. Barb and her husband Tom enjoyed 54 years of marriage. They were blessed with five children; Kevin (Heidi), Bill (Summer), Tom (Jenna), Bob (Jen) and Nancy (Brennan Latham). Barb lavished love and praise on 9 cherished grandchildren; Sarah, Rachel, Emma, Bobby, Clare, Kenzie, Abby, Cameron and Calvin. They were the center of her universe. Barb has now rejoined her father, Bill Gilliland; her mother, Helen Gilliland; and her brother, Bill Gilliland (Pearla). Her brother Ed (Kathleen) will deeply miss her loving, caring and thoughtful ways, as will a legion of both new and old friends. A Memorial Service will be held in Chicago at a later date and time to be announced where Family and Friends will celebrate a life very well lived.

CHICAGO WEATHER CENTER

chicagoweathercenter.com | BY TOM SKILLING AND WGN9

SATURDAY, JULY 20 NORMAL HIGH: 84° NORMAL LOW: 64° RECORD HIGH: 101° (1980) RECORD LOW: 53° (1970)

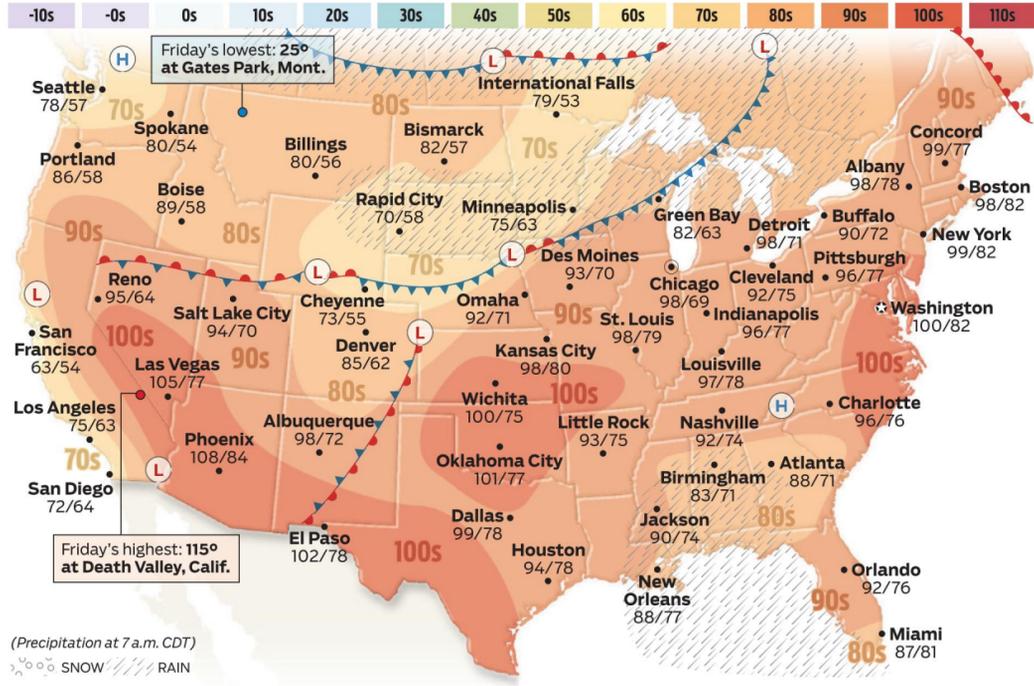

Another hot, humid day before relief arrives

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH 98 LOW 69

■ Heat and humidity continue. Excessive heat warning remains in effect until 7 PM.
 ■ Hazy and muggy to start to the day. Temps at sunrise, mid-upper 70s suburbs, low 80s city.
 ■ Sunshine dominates the day, though scattered clouds build in the afternoon.
 ■ T-storms erupt far north sections late, possibly reaching city in evening.
 ■ Temps peak in the upper 90s. Hi values hover around 110.
 ■ More concentrated storms arrive overnight, some with heavy rain and strong winds.

NATIONAL FORECAST

Remnant clouds from early morning storms to our north delayed heating for a time Friday morning, but afternoon temps still reached 95 degrees at Midway airport, and at Valparaiso. Humidity levels have been stifling. Dew points as high as 81 degrees were observed at Lansing and Joliet. Heat indices peaked at 117 at Burr Ridge. Officially, O'Hare airport registered a low temp of 81, setting a record for the highest minimum temp for the date. This was also Chicago's first 80-degree low since July 23, 2012.

Similar conditions are expected Saturday as heat indices again reach 110-115. Cooler, less humid air is due to arrive Sunday and Monday in the wake of a cold front. Thunderstorms are likely as the front passes Saturday into Sunday, and 90-degree heat is to retreat through midweek as a dome of hot air shifts west.

SUNDAY, JULY 21

HIGH 80 LOW 66

Cold front brings relief from high heat and humidity. T-storms likely into midday before settling south of the area. Temps peak around 80 despite clouds, then dip into the 70s as winds turn NE at 10-15 mph.

MONDAY, JULY 22

HIGH 76 LOW 61

Significant dip in jet stream sends refreshingly cooler, less humid air across the region. Morning clouds, then clearing. Highs range from near 80 well inland, to the low 70s lakeside. NE winds 15-25 mph.

TUESDAY, JULY 23

HIGH 82 LOW 63

Sunny and pleasant. Temps peak in the low 80s, but hold in the mid 70s along the lake as N winds diminish to 10-15 mph and turn NE. Clear and seasonable overnight.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24

HIGH 85 LOW 67

Temps begin a gradual increase under mostly sunny skies. Seasonably warm with highs mainly in the mid 80s. NW winds 10-15 mph become NE. Fair at night, lows in the 60s.

THURSDAY, JULY 25

HIGH 86 LOW 67

High pressure shifts east of the area allowing winds to turn SW at 10-15 mph. Temps and humidity levels continue to slowly rise. Scattered fair weather clouds develop midday, otherwise sunny.

FRIDAY, JULY 26

HIGH 89 LOW 70

SW winds increase to 15-25 mph bringing a more significant increase in temps and humidity. Afternoon highs close in on the 90-degree mark area wide. Warmer at night. Lows hold around 70.

NOTE: Predicted high/low temps on Tribune weather page are chronological—the "high" refers to maximum reading expected during day and "low" is the minimum reading expected the following night.

ASK TOM

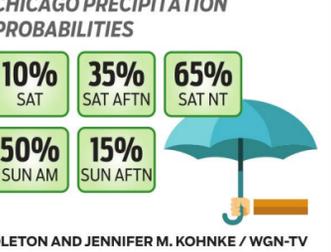

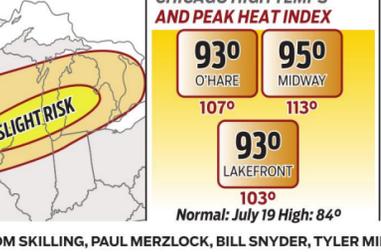

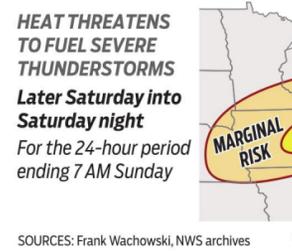

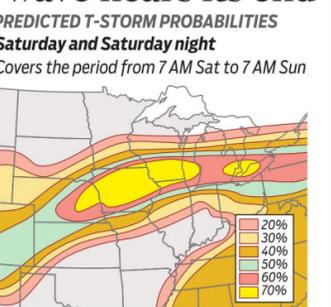

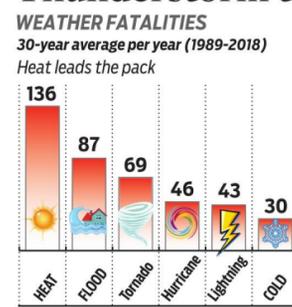

Dear Tom,
 Can you please advise what Chicago area weather conditions were like on the evening of the Apollo 11 moon landing on July 20, 1969? I seem to remember being able to see the moon very clearly that night after watching the landing coverage on television.
 — Doug Barnum, Homewood

Dear Doug,
 The weather in Chicago was picture-perfect on that historic day. When Apollo 11 landed on the moon at 3:17 p.m. CDT, the area was experiencing clear skies with great visibility. The temperature was a comfortable 80 degrees and the wind was blowing in off the lake from the north-northeast at 12-15 mph. The moon phase that day was a waxing crescent with 32% of the moon's surface visible. The moon actually rose at 11:30 a.m. that day and was likely visible as skies darkened during the evening until it set at 11:14 p.m.
