Faith lost with church shelter

An attempt to help homeless left residents in poor conditions

By Cecilia Reyes and Elvia Malagón

Two men dragged a refrigerator across the kitchen, tipping it out the side door of a two-story home on Chicago's Southeast Side. A third man used pliers to snap a stove loose from the gas valve before hauling it away. A woman screamed after them.

The men said they worked for the home's owner and were taking back his appliances. The woman, whose family had lived there for more than a year, repeatedly called 911, saking the city to stop them.

asking the city to stop them. "I know this is illegal,"

she said in a video she recorded in June, thinking they were evicting her. "You need a freaking court order. You need a freaking order from the freaking sheriff department."

Conditions inside the home, operated as a shelter by a church, became so dire this year that the city intervened. The residents went without heat as temperatures plummeted to below minus 20 degrees in January. Then this summer, they went without air conditioning and some appliances.

For years, the shelter was run with no oversight

Officials tried to find reasons for aid delay

By Josh Dawsey, CAROL D. LEONNIG AND TOM HAMBURGER The Washington Post

A confidential White House review of President Donald Trump's decision to place a hold on military aid to Ukraine has turned up hundreds of documents that reveal extensive efforts to generate an after-the-fact justification for the decision and a debate over whether the delay was legal, according to three people familiar with the records.

The research by the White House Counsel's Office, which was triggered by a congressional impeachment inquiry announced in September, includes early August email exchanges between acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney and White House budget officials seeking to provide an explanation for withholding the funds after Trump had already ordered a hold in mid-July

Trucks get tech overhaul

MARY WISNIEWSKI Getting Around

Krystian Gebis did not have to keep his hands on the wheel when he operated a specially modified Peterbilt semi truck along a test track last month.

In a ghostly fashion, the steering wheel turned by itself.

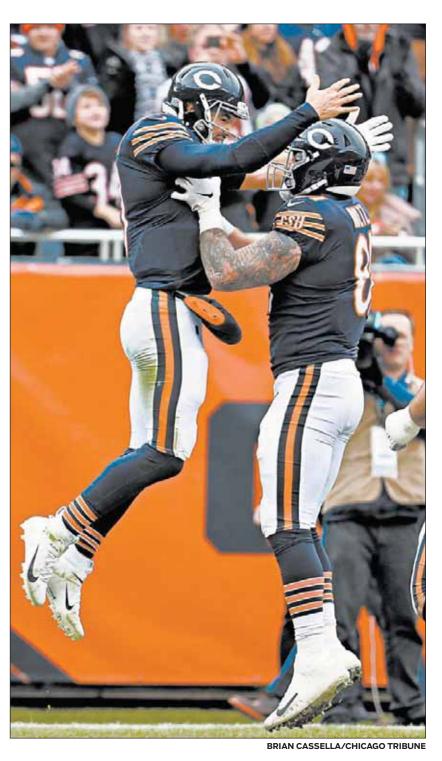

Gebis, co-founder and chief executive of the Lisle technology company Autobon AI, spent months testing the truck's abilities to steer and brake on its own on the Chicagoland Speedway track in Joliet. And now the company is ready to try it in regular traffic on the Jane Addams Tollway.

With the Illinois Tollway's permission and cooperation, Autobon's truck will be on the road starting Monday. A driver will be behind the wheel at all times, according to Gebis.

"The driver still has full control," Gebis said. "We want to make sure the truck isn't weaving in the lane and it maintains a safe following distance. We want to make sure it's very precisely driving."

The test by Autobon this week is a harbinger of something road users are going to be seeing more of in the coming decades —

Treasurer hired security using taxpayer funds

CPD found there was no threat, she disagreed

By Gregory Pratt

City Treasurer Melissa Conyears-Ervin paid $35 an hour for private security using taxpayer money after the Chicago Police Department eliminated her protective detail earlier this year because it found she was not in any danger, newly released records show.

Conyears-Ervin personally protested the department's move to Mayor Lori Lightfoot, who stood behind the decision after a contentious exchange of emails, records between the two citywide elected officials show.

"Of course, if you believe the assessment is incorrect and you are in need of a security detail, there is nothing to prevent you from using resources under your control to procure private security resources," Lightfoot wrote to Conyears-Ervin this summer. ANDREW CABALLERO-REYNOLDS/GETTY-AFF

National Security Council Ukraine expert Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Vindman arrives to testify on Tuesday.

This Thanksgiving, let's show gratitude to our fearless American diplomats

DAHLEEN GLANTON

We should consider it a blessing that the impeachment hearings came as we are approaching the Thanksgiving holiday. Even with the troubling revelations, we are reminded that, despite our nation's faults, there is much to be thankful for.

It can be difficult to concentrate on the good when we are obsessed with the bad. It often seems wasteful to try and be positive while floating in a sea of negativity. It is hard to look ahead when we are buried so deep in the problems of the present.

Then a beam of light makes its way through. And we remember that we have the power to change the things we do not like or fix the things that are damaged. There are many good people among us who are willing to join the fight. Though we didn't know it, there were agents of our government foreign service who believe strongly in America and have been working quietly yet forcefully against corruption on our behalf.

Some of them were on display last week, testifying honestly and bravely before the House Intelligence Committee's impeachment hearings on Donald Trump.

Regardless of whether you believe the president should be removed from office, it would be hard to argue that witnesses such as former Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch; acting Ambassador to Ukraine William Taylor; Fiona Hill, the former top Russia specialist on the National Security Council; and Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, an adviser on the National Security Council, aren't true warriors for our nation's values.

These public servants embody patriotism through and through. Though scorned and threatened, they ignored White House attempts to silence them. And for that, we should be thankful.

If you had no time to listen to hours of testimony during four days of hearings, it would behoove you to read the opening statements of the key witnesses. Each, in their own way, warned that our democracy remains under attack by foreign forces that despise everything America stands for. They provided evidence that those at our nation's helm have no interest or desire to stop it.

The things we are most grateful for on Thanksgiving — our freedom of speech and thought, our democratic right to choose our nation's leaders and our ability to hold our elected officials accountable — are under siege. Now that we know this for sure, the question for all of us is this: "Do we love America enough to save it?"

Vindman put it most succinctly. When he was 3, his family fled Ukraine when it was part of what was then the Soviet Union. Growing up in America, he learned from his father to appreciate American values and ideals, and the power of freedom.

"I am a patriot," he said, "and it is my sacred duty and honor to advance and defend our country, irrespective of party or politics."

A longtime military man, Vindman was very much aware of the consequences he might face by testifying. But he spoke up anyway, because America affords him that freedom.

"I also recognize that my simple act of appearing here today, just like the courage of my colleagues who have also truthfully testified before this committee, would not be tolerated in many places around the world," he said.

"In Russia, my act of expressing my concerns to the chain of command in an official and private channel would have severe personal and professional repercussions and offering public testimony involving the president would surely cost me my life."

He and others came forward because these are freedoms worth protecting.

Hill, who had a career as a nonpartisan, nonpolitical national security professional who served under three presidents, Democratic and Republican, before resigning earlier this year, gave the starkest warning of the Russians' goal to undermine our democracy.

"Some of you on this committee appear to believe that Russia and its security services did not conduct a campaign against our country — and that perhaps, somehow, for some reason, Ukraine did," she said. "This is a fictional narrative that has been perpetrated and propagated by the Russian security services themselves."

The Russian government's goal is to weaken our country — to diminish America's global role and to neutralize a perceived U.S. threat to Russian interests, allowing Russia to reassert political and economic pressure in Europe, including Ukraine.

The impact of the successful 2016 Russian campaign remains evident today, Hill said.

"Our nation is being torn apart. Truth is questioned. Our highly professional and expert career foreign service is being undermined," she said.

Without a doubt, this country that we all love is under a fierce and unrelenting attack. But it is comforting to know that there have been people who share our values working diligently behind the scenes.

So as we sit at our tables this Thanksgiving, surrounded by family and friends, let's share a moment of gratitude for these American diplomats who risked everything to ensure that our democracy remains intact.

Southside Wolfpack football Coach Rynell Morgan gathers collected donations from his players in Chicago on Saturday.

'WE'RE IN SHOCK'

South Side youth football teams raise money to attend national championships

By Javonte Anderson and Alice Yin

The boys moved with a purpose – their little white and red football jerseys glimmering under the stadium lights.

Here, on a football field in the Woodlawn neighborhood, just a stone's throw away from the proposed site for the Obama Presidential Center, the Southside Wolfpack, a youth football team, practiced with the exuberance and ferocity of a team that's chasing something.

They stretched and sprinted, yelling at themselves for motivation. With every exhale, their breath could be seen from a distance in the crisp autumn air. The November night was cold, with a hint of that biting Chicago wind.

This night there was no audience, but next month they'll be playing in front of large crowds in Florida.

The Wolfpack is one of two South Side youth football teams that raised enough money to attend two separate youth national championship tournaments.

The Wolfpack 12u team, with kids ages 11-12, qualified for the American Youth Football Championship national tournament in Kissimmee, Florida, after winning local, regional and state championships. Similarly, the Back of the Yards Buccaneers 12u team received an invitation to compete in the World Youth Football Championship in Canton, Ohio

hio. Coaches and parents of players vowed they wouldn't let money be an obstacle.

"It definitely means the world to these kids," said Anthony Martinez, coach of the Buccaneers. "A lot of these kids when we get them, they're troubled. The streets raised these kids. ... Now, they have smiles on their faces. They've changed."

"This isn't about what they deserve," said Earnest Radcliff, Southside Wolfpack's program director. "These boys earned the opportunity to compete in Florida."

The Buccaneers had less than two weeks to raise the money to attend the championships that begins Dec. 11. A GoFundMe has garnered over $12,000 from the initial $8,000 goal as of Sunday morning.

The Wolfpack hoped to raise $15,000 for the team's airplane tickets, hotel stay and food. Their national championship is from Dec. 7 through Dec. 15. As of Sunday morning, the team's GoFundMe had raised over $18,000.

"This is a tremendous opportunity for them," said Radcliffe. "Everybody has been so excited, especially throughout the city. It's been a truly amazing experience for our young people. God has been very good to us."

The Wolfpack spent their Saturday morning fundraising on 87th Street near the Dan Ryan Expressway. Meanwhile, the Buccaneers joined their coach at major intersections on the Southwest Side this weekend to sell chocolate to pay for transportation and housing expenses.

But this Chicago football story is incomplete without an understanding of where these boys come from. The Wolfpack's team comprises boys from several South Side neighborhoods — Bronzeville, Woodlawn, Englewood, Kenwood and South Shore.

That's why the Wolfpack is more than a youth football program. All the players are required to sign an academic agreement before joining the team, promising they maintain a 3.0 GPA.

"It's bigger than football," said Rynell Morgan, the Wolfpack's head coach. "This right here is not guaranteed to them. We have to make sure they have their academics; they have to have their grades."

The team's success can largely be attributed to the bond they forged in the last few months. The players spend time at one another's houses and spend hours on the weekend playing "Madden" or "Fortnite" on PlayStation, several parents said.

"I told my son this is something that no one can ever take from you," said William Harvey, whose son is on the Wolfpack team. "This is just an experience of a lifetime."

Ruth Rojas, the mother of a Buccaneers player, sees the change in her 12-year-old son — and in herself.

A self-designated football mom, she started out attending every practice and driving his teammates to late-night meals after games. Then, she took in two of his teammates who didn't have anywhere to go because their mother was incarcerated, she said.

"There are opportunities that without this team, they would never get a chance to do," the 35-year-old said. "There are kids on this team that has never been out of the city. They don't know if Ohio is cold or not. If we can get every kid just to experience and live it, it would be great."

When Martinez heard the Buccaneers met their goal, he immediately called a couple of the moms that worked with the team. Martinez said he is especially grateful for an anonymous donor to the campaign who donated a large sum of the money.

"We're in shock right now," he said. "Having these kids go on their first trip out of Chicago and seeing them be happy is amazing. They get to act like kids."

For 11-year-old Dallas Mayfield, his hope that his Wolfpack team to travel and compete in Florida will become a reality.

Dallas said he's particularly excited about being able to fly in an airplane for the first time.

He's never been in the clouds. He's hoping for a window seat.

"I just can't wait to see the view," he said.

Lake Park football team on probation for recruiting violations

Part of probe into sex offender used as volunteer coach

By Angie Leventis Lourgos

Lake Park High School's football program has been placed on probation for a year by the Illinois High School Association for recruiting violations that came to light during a recent internal investigation into how a sex offender was permitted to serve there as a volunteer coach.

School District 108, based in west suburban Roselle, announced in a written statement Friday that the IHSA has ruled that former head football coach Chris Roll violated association bylaws on the recruiting of athletes. The violations took place over four years, the district said.

The team will be on probation until Nov. 21, 2020, and Roll — who was removed from the position of head football coach at Lake Park earlier this month — has been deemed ineligible to coach at any IHSA member school for a year, based on the association's ruling.

"Potential recruiting violations emerged during the district's football investigation," district officials said in the statement. "As an IHSA member school, Lake Park is required to not only conduct an internal investigation but also report findings to the IHSA when potential violations within athletic programs are discovered."

In an email, a district spokeswoman described the violations as "outreach to parents and middle school students, some of whom were outside the Lake Park High School attendance area."

IHSA officials did not immediately return requests for comment. Roll declined to comment on Friday.

Lake Park officials had removed Roll as head football coach on Nov. 7 after determining that he failed to follow district-required criminal background check procedures and "directed an assistant coach to remove the volunteer coach" from a list of names submitted for a background check, according to a previous district statement. The volunteer coach -72-year-old Frank Battaglia had been convicted of aggravated criminal sexual abuse in DuPage County in 1992, which would have appeared had a proper background check been done. He was sentenced to 24 months' probation and counseling, and was prohibited from coaching school athletics as a term of his probation, according to court documents. His probation, however, was terminated satisfactorily in

The school district has said it requires head coaches to submit their team's coaching roster, including volunteer coaches, for criminal background checks.

Despite the district's findings, Roll was allowed to return to his teaching position within the district.

District officials have recommended the board of education take more disciplinary action against Roll, based on the determination that he impeded the background check. Athletic Director Pete Schauer and Principal Dominic Manola also are to be disciplined, the district said earlier this month. The board's next meeting is scheduled for Monday evening.

Schauer had questioned Roll on Oct. 7 about the identity of the volunteer coach, according to the district, but the athletic director failed to require a criminal background check "based on Roll's response that the volunteer coach had limited involvement coaching and interacting with players."

The district has also said the principal did not report a conversation on Sept. 28 "in which he was told the volunteer coach has a background which could prevent him from working with student athletes."

Battaglia was removed from volunteer coaching at Lake Park on Oct. 18, according to a district spokeswoman.

Battaglia was in his 40s when convicted of the sex offense. The victim was between the ages of 13 and 16, according to court documents. Battaglia had previously told the Tribune that he was recruited by individuals connected to the Lake Park football program and was never required to fill out paperwork.

Victim Debbie Sciortino of Addison told the Tribune she was 14 when the abuse began, as a freshman at now-defunct Driscoll Catholic High School in Addison. Battaglia was a school football coach, and Sciortino said her brothers were football players.

Former Lake Park head coach Roll is a popular figure in the community, and many parents and students have decried his removal from that position. An online petition demanding his reinstatement had more than 7,000 signatures by Friday afternoon.

"Chris Roll is a man, coach and teacher of impeccable character, as evidenced by the hundreds of individuals who have shown up to support him at the (board of education meetings)," the petition said. "The time and sacrifices Chris Roll has made for our community are remarkable and immeasurable."

Sciortino, however, said she finds the support "baffling."

"I will speak up to defend other children that don't have a voice," she said in a phone interview.

Lake Park was the second suburban high school to lose its head coach this month over a connection to the same convicted sex offender.

Fenwick High School head football coach Gene Nudo had stepped down in mutual agreement with the school earlier this month after it came to light that several years ago he allowed a coaching colleague to assist from the sidelines without undergoing a background check.

Nudo had confirmed to the Tribune that the coaching colleague was Battaglia, and that he and Battaglia had coached together at Driscoll in 1991. Nudo declined to comment further on Battaglia's 1992 conviction

The west suburban Oak Park-based private school said in a written statement that it requires any volunteer to undergo a background check, but in 2016, Nudo allowed "someone whom he had coached with in the past" to attend a couple of football practices and assist on the sidelines during some games at the end of the season.

As for the decision to place the Lake Park football program on probation, the "IHSA indicated that additional sanctions were avoided based on the district's actions to remove the former head football coach," according to the district's statement.

"This probationary status does not deprive Lake Park of any privileges as an IHSA member school," the statement said. "Rather, it serves as an official warning that any further violations of IHSA by-laws or rules could bring more serious consequences."

Prosecutors: Woman tried to employ undercover cop in murder-for-hire

By Marie Fazio and Katherine Rosenberg-Douglas

A Chicago woman, accused in a plot to kill her ex-partner's new romantic interest, wanted the job done before Thanksgiving so the victim couldn't celebrate the holiday in the home the former couple once shared, prosecutors said Sunday in a bond hearing.

Lissette Ortiz, 54, who was charged with one felony count of murder-solicitation for hire, allegedly asked an undercover cop to tie up a 62-year-old woman, drive her to a remote location and set the car on fire.

According to prosecutors, Ortiz is accused of offering a man $5,000 to perform the kidnapping, or $500 and a large TV to introduce her to someone who would do the job, telling the man she would "take care of the rest."

Ortiz requested the deed be completed before Thanksgiving, prosecutors said, and once it was finished, she told the man she would escape to Puerto Rico.

The man told police about the plan, and they arranged for an undercover officer to pose as a kidnapper for hire.

"Her plan, after the undercover officer kidnapped and delivered the victim to her, was to put the victim in a car while tied up and then set the car on fire in a remote location," the assistant state's attorney said. She also allegedly "made statements indicating she preferred that the victim still be alive at the time of the car fire."

According to the assistant state's attorney, Ortiz allegedly told the undercover officer that she needed the kidnapper to drive the car to the remote location so that she could have an alibi.

This wasn't Ortiz's first attempt to do away with her ex's new love interest, prosecutors alleged. She told the undercover cop she had already paid someone else a fee, but that the person had run away with the money before performing the job.

After Ortiz was recorded allegedly divulging the details of her plan to the undercover officer, she was taken into custody Friday. She was charged with one felony count of murder-solicitation for hire.

Officers recovered a file containing detailed information about the victim's whereabouts and found some of Ortiz's belongings packed in boxes in her home.

Ortiz, of the 4800 block of North Austin Avenue in Jefferson Park, has lived in Chicago for most of her life and has two children, her attorney said. She added that Ortiz's possessions were packed in boxes because she was planning to move with her son into her sister's home.

In a bond hearing Sunday, Judge Mary C. Marubio ordered Ortiz held without bail and granted the special conditions requested by the prosecution. Ortiz must refrain from contacting the victim and witnesses and turn over any firearms or passports she has in her possession.

"This case involved a substantial amount of planning," Marubio said, noting the file that contained detailed comings and goings of the target. "I do find you pose a significant danger to the victim."

If found guilty, the mandatory sentencing range for the offense is 15-30 years, the assistant state's attorney said.

Ortiz has one prior felony conviction for theft and forgery and a pending misdemeanor charge for theft. She will next appear in court at 11:30 a.m. Monday.

Strike averted: U of C nurses, hospital reach agreement

By Lisa Schencker

About 2,200 University of Chicago Medical Center nurses will not strike Tuesday as planned, after their union reached an agreement with the hospital Saturday morning.

The nurses had been without a contract since April. The union planned to strike for one day, and the hospital said it would lock nurses out for an additional four days to guarantee a certain amount of work for replacement nurses.

"Both sides have been working since March on a contract that not only recognizes the valuable contributions our nurses make to our organization, but also ensures UCMC remains at the forefront of medical care and scientific research for years to come," said Debra Albert, the hospital's chief nursing officer, in a note to nurses Saturday morning.

The nurses' union said it's scheduled to vote on the tentative agreement Tuesday.

Earlier this week, the hospital began transferring about 50 babies and 20 children in its neonatal and pediatric intensive care units to other hospitals asked ambulances to take emergency patients elsewhere.

The hospital was again accepting ambulances carrying trauma patients Saturday morning, and will resume accepting ambulances as the hospital returns to normal operations, said spokeswoman Ashley Heher, in an email. The hospital is also looking into transferring patients back as its units reopen, though patients don't have to return to the hospital if they'd prefer to stay where they are now, she said.

For the hospital, a major sticking point in negotiations was whether newly hired nurses should get incentive pay, which is a higher rate of pay for hours worked beyond a certain amount each week. The union, National Nurses Organizing Committee/National Nurses United, said it was holding out over staffing issues

Had the nurses walked off the job, it would have been their second strike in recent months.

The nurses went on a one-day strike in September, which was followed by a four-day lockout. The hospital said it had trouble recruiting enough replacement nurses in September because the strike happened the same day as many other nurse strikes across the country.

During that strike and lockout, the hospital moved babies and children in intensive care units to other hospitals, canceled and rescheduled elective surgeries and asked ambulances to take patients elsewhere.

But in 2016, the shelter did catch the city's attention for using the home's basement as bedrooms. The city has alleged new code violations since, but there has been no resolution.

The Rev. Malcolm Griffith, who leads the congregation at Advocate United Church of Christ, said he wanted to tackle homelessness when he opened the shelter in 2013. But now, the church is embroiled in its second eviction case and trying to shut down the shelter.

"I never would have opened my doors to hurt people or to make them worse off than when they met me," Griffith said.

What unfolded this year strained an already tense relationship between residents and the church.

A spiritual mission

Holmes and her family of six, including her mother, arrived at what's known as the Advocate House in mid-2018. They had been living in a hotel room when someone mentioned Griffith's shelter

They saw the move to the East Side neighborhood as temporary, a way to save for their own place. Griffith even helped Holmes and her brother land jobs.

"In me and my brother's mind, that's all we were thinking of because we were like, we need money, we need a job, we need a place to stay," Holmes said earlier this year.

The two-story home has white siding with a rain garden and is adjacent to the church. There are five rooms, plus a basement, and a small backyard. The structure sits on a residential street lined with single-family houses and small businesses.

Before moving in, the family signed a 10-page "covenant agreement" outlining the terms of what was supposed to be a yearlong stay, which included a curfew and access to their bank account information.

Holmes and previous residents paid a weekly program fee, which varied by person. She paid $125 in cash, with text messages as receipts, she said, and she and others who lived in the shelter paid another fee for Griffith to take them to work at suburban temp agencies.

Griffith said he got the idea to use the house to curb homelessness while studying Bible Scriptures. He wanted to do something that felt like a tangible solution to a complex social problem.

"Most people will feed (the homeless), most people will give them clothing, but it's very hard for them to get a place to stay," Griffith said by phone. "... And so we said, let's start there."

There were as many as 18 people living there at one time, according to minutes of house meetings, which were sometimes attended by church staff mem-

Several past residents who spoke to the Tribune said they thought the program didn't help them attain permanent housing and was stressful. But one of them, who contacted the newspaper at Griffith's request, said she found the shelter helpful. She remains active in the congregation.

Chicago police reports provide a window into some of the challenges as people moved in and out. Police were called several times since 2016 for reports ranging from a resident locked out after violating a house rule to domestic disturbances. These resulted in at least one arrest.

Nationwide, transitional shelters are on the decline because they can be costly and not as effective as programs that help people find and pay for a permanent home, said Nan Roman, president and CEO of the National Alliance to End Homelessness.

"It doesn't achieve the outcomes that some of the much less expensive interventions do achieve," Roman said. "It's kind of a prolonged interim period of homelessness."

Months into the living arrangement, Holmes said she and her family weren't any closer to getting their own place.

"We can't save because if I'm getting a $500 check, I'm giving you $350 up out of there," Holmes said in an interview about her time at the shelter. "I still have a phone bill to pay, I still need a bus card to go to work, I still have food because we don't get a Link card (for food stamps). ... It starts getting to us, like, we're never going to get out of here. We are going to be stuck just sitting here."

'A shock and a surprise'

No single agency regulates temporary shelters in Chicago, since oversight is generally tied to a funding source.

Because the Advocate House got money to operate through the residents and church — not through publicly or government funded programs — it was held to its own standards. The church didn't have to account for the shelter's finances or outcomes oven to its parent organization.

This was by design. Griffith said he didn't want the limitations, even if that meant contributing to the program out of his pocket.

"When you take other people's money, you have to abide by their guidelines," he said.

If the shelter had received state funding, it would have been required to submit quarterly reports, applications for prospective residents and documentation of the services provided in exchange for residents' weekly fees. By law, people can stay at state-funded shelters for up to 24 months and pay a maximum of 30% of their income.

Griffith viewed the weekly fee as a way to prepare residents for the "real world."

"It was a way of not having something free," he said. "We found people didn't value free. They had to get some skin in the game."

The head of the church's parent organization, the Illinois Conference of the United Church of Christ, said he was unaware Advocate was charging residents when the Tribune first contacted him.

"Clearly, this is a shock and a surprise," said the Rev. Justo González, interim conference minister. Officials from the parent organization later said they were saddened by what unfolded in recent months, but stood behind Griffith's intentions.

It's unclear whether Griffith's weekly fee was rent — the pastor maintains that he's not a landlord — but the church has filed for eviction to remove residents on advice from county courts and the Chicago Police Department, according to a recent court bearing.

cording to a recent court hearing.

The single-family home was still subject to municipal zoning and building laws, enforced by the Department of Buildings.

The church never got a zoning permit to turn the home into a shelter. A Chicago ordinance on temporary shelters states that a nonprofit organization must run them at no charge to the residents, but it isn't generally enforced, according to the Department of Buildings.

'We put faith in them'

In the past few years, the shelter has been at the center of two city lawsuits.

In June 2016, a 311 call reported the property's basement had been turned into bedrooms for rent, prompting a visit from city inspectors. The city sued the church over the alleged housing violation, but the case was tossed out in May 2018, and the church wasn't required to pay fines, according to court records. Inspectors at the time felt assured by church officials that the building wouldn't be used as a rooming house and would return to its original state as a single-family home, said Steven McKenzie, a city attorney.

"We put faith in them, and they didn't follow through," McKenzie said.

City inspectors were back at the shelter this past January. As temperatures were dropping to dangerous levels, the heat and lights at the Advocate House were disconnected.

"We sleeping in hats, coats, under scarves, everything," Holmes recalled about that time period.

ComEd confirmed service to the home was disconnected Jan. 14 after the account holder took its name off the utility. The next day, a call was made to 311 reporting the electricity was shut off by the owner. Later that day, Holmes started a new electricity account.

Four days later, the city's 311 system got another complaint, this time that the property had no heat or hot water, records show. Just after 1:30 a.m. Jan. 22, someone called 911 to request a well-being check, according to city records, saying there was no heat and about 10 people were in the house, some using space heaters but one just swaddled in blankets.

Later that day, Peoples Gas restored service when Holmes started another account for the shelter, according to paperwork provided by residents. The paperwork noted service had been disconnected at potentially dangerous conditions. Peoples Gas would not go into detail about this case, but said the company doesn't disconnect service from Nov. 1 to March 31 unless safety is a concern.

To make matters worse, a pipe burst and flooded the basement. The city took notice, and by the time inspectors checked the home on Jan. 28, there were a couple of inches of frozen water, according to court proceedings, and the temperature in the basement was 57 degrees, well below city requirements.

The city filed an emergency housing case against the church, which is still ongoing months later. The city has since issued more code violations.

'These look like Gestapo tactics'

In addition to the shelter's alleged violations of the city code, tensions heightened when the church filed eviction notices property, she said. She filmed the interactions on her phone, repeatedly saying she couldn't believe what was happening.

the Tribune.

Griffith said in court that the church removed the appliances to make repairs. Besides, he said, the tenants had tried to sell the appliances on Facebook. In court, Holmes disputed whether the church actually owned the appliances. Griffith later shared with the Tribune a screenshot of what appeared to be one resident trying to sell a dryer online. The argument didn't sway Cook County Judge David Skryd, who presided over the eviction trial in August.

For over 20 minutes, Skryd listened to Holmes' arguments, an unusually long time for eviction cases, which typically last less than two minutes, according to a report by the Lawyers' Committee for Better Housing.

The residents said they didn't have enough time to move before the appliances were taken out. The judge allowed Holmes to play her videos over Griffith's lawyer's objections. Her words reverberated in an otherwise silent courtroom.

"To evict someone you have to go to the sheriff's office and they has to come and get this stuff out, not you all," Holmes said in the recording. "What you're doing is illegal!"

When Skryd turned to Griffith and asked if he found anything problematic about the situation, the pastor replied the problem was that the church had been asking "nicely" for the residents to leave since 2018.

"These look like Gestapo tactics," the judge countered. He ruled in the tenants' favor and sealed that first eviction case at Holmes' request.

An uncertain future

But three months later, with a new eviction case pending, Holmes' family of six, including an elementary-school-age child, still doesn't have their own place. They might live separately, a relative recently said.

And the property still faces code violations. In July, the city filed an amended complaint, urging the church to make repairs based on building codes for single-room occupancy. Though no one lives in the basement anymore, it still floods and there are electrical concerns, according to court records.

The church's lawyers argue that some of the violations should be dismissed because they no longer plan to use the structure as a shelter. They also say the shelter was only in the basement, though former and current residents told the Tribune they lived throughout the house.

The church also claims that anyone who lived in the shelter since Jan. 22 is a trespasser. That coincides with the day someone called 911 to say there wasn't any heat in the home. The documents make no mention of a weekly program fee or the shelter's covenant agreement.

As for Griffith, he had planned to continue his ministry by converting a vacant motel in suburban Harvey into a shelter. He changed his mind, because of what unfolded with the Advocate House in Chicago, he said.

"I thought it would be ideal for an Advocate House setting, because everyone would have their own units," Griffith said. "But that's clearly off the table at this point."

Residents of the church-owned shelter kept their food on ice after a refrigerator was removed over the summer.

If you believe your only options are agonizing knee pain or surgery... You are WRONG!

Thousands of Chicagoland Boomers and Seniors are now getting knee pain RELIEF, INSTEAD of knee replacement.

It turns out, the secret of enjoying the "golden years" is NOT simply having a giant nest egg for retirement Why?

Recent research showed that Baby Boomers and seniors who lead an active lifestyle during retirement, and continue doing the things they truly enjoy, free of pain, ARE happier, regardless of income level or wealth.

And truth be told, people who don't have their mobility to enjoy their favorite activities at that age, all the money in the world won't bring true happiness.

We know this because we hear people say this over and over again at the Joint Relief Institute in Orland Park. Comments like this . . .

"I didn't know how much LIFE and SLEEP I was missing because of my knee pain, until it went away with this wonderful treatment."

— George R.

You know how it is . . .

You start to recognize your knee is hurting, and you try pain medicines, braces, or different over-the-counter arthritis supplements. Soon enough, you realize they either cause lots of side effects, or they fail to live up to their promise of fast, long-lasting relief, and are not worth the price of the bottle they come in.

And BECAUSE you'd prefer NOT to go under the knife . . .

And can't afford to be put in bed for several weeks, and because you know people who still hurt EVEN after surgery . . . you give up, and learn to live with the pain. BUT, you miss out on things you enjoy doing, and lose your golden years one activity at a time

With less activity, comes weight gain, and depression . . . Yes, you can put up with this ache in your knee, but the cost of doing nothing about it is HUGE. You are not doing yourself a favor by "toughing it out."

"Six months later, I found out the one thing between me and losing 20 lbs, WAS my knee pain"

"Every day was hard. I couldn't enjoy my favorite activities anymore. But thankfully, now I'm back in full form. I am doing yard work for the first time in years!" — Phil M.

What are my options if I don't want to undergo surgery?

Today we live in an age with tremendous technology advances, and that's what Joint Relief Institute doctors use to put new life and energy into failing knee joints.

Using precise, advanced imaging, they gently place an all natural joint lubricant directly inside your knee to replace the lost fluid that's causing your pain. This treatment has proven to have a very high rate of success.

However, it HAS to be done right with advanced imaging . . .

A recent study examined trained

Advanced Digital technology is used to eliminate a HUGE percentage of treatment failures. Every treatment at Joint Relief Institute is pin-pointed to the damaged area inside the knee. The doctors see the medication live as it goes to help the troubled joint.

doctors and surgeons who attempted these injections without using advanced imaging. Instead, they simply felt the knee with their fingers and BLINDLY delivered the replacement fluid.

The study revealed that these doctors missed the target most of the time . . . In fact, 30% of the time, they didn't even place the treatment inside the joint. Yes THIRTY percent. It is not a typo.

Alternative to the knife for your knee pain? Non-Surgical treatment success rate soars after using new digital technology

Even after missing the target, they had no way of knowing they missed, because they are not SEEING it with advanced imaging.

That means these patients went away thinking they had received a life-changing treatment, and, in fact, did not get any benefit at all. Even worse, many of them went on to have surgery they didn't need.

How did Joint Relief Institute find the Antidote to this MISERABLE failure . . .

The doctors at the Joint Relief Institute are trained in using cutting-edge low dose motion digital imaging. These highly skilled, Board Certified doctors are able to see into the knee joint. They actually watch the medicine, live, as it goes where it needs to be. This technology is so precise, so advanced, and so forefront that it was able to make a whole difference in Nonsurgical treatments.

"We've had so many patients tell us they RECEIVED treatments like Synvisc or Orthovisc in the past, and it didn't work. So they were considering surgery, and some even had surgery scheduled. Luckily, we were able to save many of those people from the knife." Said Dr Mike Hana at the Joint Relief Institute.

Joint Relief Institute's proven accuracy and effective treatment is why people are traveling hundreds of miles to get knee pain treatment from their Doctors.

Why did Knee treatments from Joint Relief Institute become the talk of the town?

Many seniors walk out feeling better than they have in years! So as you might imagine, when their friends see them move easier, walk further, sleep better and are happier, they want it also.

Only days after this treatment, people usually notice a decrease in: Pain... Stiffness...Muscle weakness... Swelling... Locked joints... Reduced range of motion... and Cracking sounds.

Most patients who receive the treatment are able to live pain free for up to 6 months, and some even get relief for 3-5 years with NO additional treatments.

How does the treatment help relieve your joint pain...

It's pretty simple, really. You see, when you're young, you have a thick, fluid protein inside your knee joints to lubricate them as you move.

This fluid also acts as a cushion and shock absorber inside your knee. It's called synovial fluid, and it works much like the oil in a car's engine to keep all the parts moving freely, without friction.

However, as you age, this fluid dries out, leaving your bones to painfully rub and grind against each other with every step. And unfortunately, there's no way for the joint to make more.

After years of trusted service in moving you everywhere you need to go, you start to feel a subtle ache in your knees with certain activities like kneeling down, or getting out of the car. With time, it becomes a constant ache. If left untreated, it can keep you awake at night, and hurt with every step.

The good news is, researchers discovered an almost identical, all natural lubricating fluid called Hyaluronic acid. It has been proven in numerous clinical studies to act as a natural lubricant in your joints.

It's FDA approved and is a perfect cushion and shock absorber for your joints. Once it's correctly placed inside your knee, it can make them feel just like new again, eliminate any rubbing and friction, and make your joints glide smoothly.

Are there any side effects to this treatment? Is the treatment painful?

After numbing the skin with a special spray, Joint Relief's imaging technology makes this treatment virtually painless. And because you are getting a supplement for a protein we are all born having, there are NO known after effects.

If you received this kind of treatment in the past, and it didn't relieve your pain, there is a BIG chance the medication landed somewhere around, but not INSIDE, the joint where it can't help you.

That is right, this is a quick, natural long-lasting, non-invasive, non-surgical treatment with NO known side effects...

Is it true? Could it be that this natural treatment cost NOTHING or very little out of pocket?

Yes! More good news besides the pain relief is that because this non-surgical pain relief program has already proven to help thousands of seniors, Medicare and other insurance plans pay for ALL or most of the cost of the treatment. So, there is very likely LITTLE or NO COST to you for this in-office treatment.

Here is what you need to do if you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain...

Call now for a free screening...

If you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain, this could be the blessed relief you're looking for. You are personally invited to a FREE knee pain screening from the Joint Relief Institute doctors to see if you are a good candidate for this all-natural, highly-precise treatment.

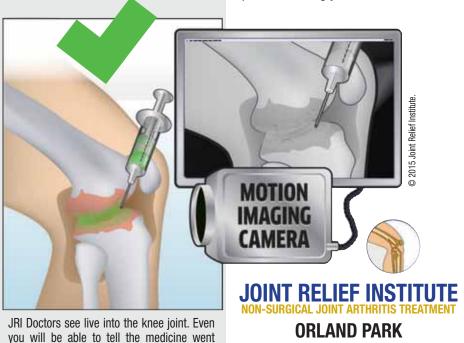

Due to high demand, they can only offer a limited number of FREE screens every month. So if you're interested, Call now (708) 963-0064.

Waiting will not help you feel better...

This ache in your knees could be a sign of serious damage and people who choose to simply "tough it out" will definitely see their knees deteriorate further over time. The one thing we know is: The damage will NEVER undo itself without some help.

Your screening will only take about 20-30 minutes of your time, as one of their doctors sits down with you and answers all the questions you have about your knees.

On the day of your treatment, you'll be able to come in on your own, and be done within 30 minutes or less. No pain. No problem driving yourself home.

JRI Doctors see live into the knee joint. Even you will be able to tell the medicine went where it needs to be. No guess work, no poking around, the medicine cushion lubricate and help heal the damaged knee.

tradition for the city treasurer to receive a security detail and spoke about feeling threatened because she took office after a contested election and manages the city's massive financial investment portfolio.

"I cannot tell you how many places I go to where people say, 'give me a loan, that's the money lady, can you write me a check?" Conyears-Ervin said, reiterating arguments she personally made to Lightfoot. "People truly associate me with money ... I've had people, when I walk in the room, they say, 'Money, money, money — money."

Records show Conyears-Ervin hired D'Shaun Bolden to provide her security in August and September, after losing her police detail. D'Shaun Bolden billed her office for $2,975, charging $35 per hour, records released by the treasurer's office show.

Conyears-Ervin then hired Brian Thompson, who used to lead Mayor Rahm Emanuel's police detail, as a security specialist but he resigned earlier this month. Records were unavailable to show how much he was paid.

Now Conyears-Ervin is working to hire a security specialist at a $60,000 salary, her chief of staff said.

Still, she stands by her criticism of the decision to take away her detail.

"I thought the process was not clear," Conyears-Ervin said. "Because of that, I did not agree with the decision and I think that's evident."

Asked about Conyears-Ervin's criticism that the process wasn't clear, police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi said the department explained its decision to Conyears-Ervin over the summer but added, "we are more than happy to meet with the treasurer at any time to discuss and articulate the process."

Lightfoot in an email to Conyears-Ervin also defended the process, saying the treasurer was interviewed twice and the police fairly evaluated her concerns. The mayor said the assessment "was thorough, fair and professional," and its findings "are well supported."

"I understand that you are planning to spend your budget dollars to hire private security," Lightfoot wrote to Conyears-Ervin. "I am moving on."

Security review

Chicago police this summer canceled the protective details assigned to Conyears-Ervin and City Clerk Anna Valencia after conducting a threat assessment on them and Emanuel, according to a July memo.

First Deputy Superintendent Anthony Riccio wrote Conyears-Ervin and Valencia in August, notifying them their security was being canceled, noting that other big cities including New York City, Los Angeles, Boston and Miami don't provide full-time police security details to the officials holding equivalent positions.

Valencia didn't receive security until earlier this year but her office objected to losing the detail as well, which the mayor's office said had been given to her as a courtesy.

Then-City Clerk Susana Mendoza in 2011 downplayed the office's need for protection. "I drive myself, and I ride my bike, so at most my security detail is either my seat belt or my helmet," Mendoza said at the time.

On Aug. 9, Conyears-Ervin wrote a letter "to whom it may concern" that said removing her security detail "would expose me to unparalleled danger as the sole custodian of a portfolio over $8 billion in taxpayer dollars."

Conyears-Ervin said she's had several strangers refer to her as "the money lady" or "the lady with the billions." Some of them have asked her "to loan some of that money."

"All of these comments have made me extremely uncomfortable and afraid that someone might try to harm me based upon the belief that I have access to upwards of an $8 billion dollar portfolio and carry some of this cash with me," Conyears-Ervin

Conyears-Ervin noted she was on the 3900 block of West Madison Avenue when "an active police chase" cut short her visit to a local business.

Around that time, she was at a West Side church and an "unknown, strange young man" started asking her frivolous questions and getting closer to her, prompting her security detail to rush her inside the car to avoid further incident.

During a July trip to Blue Ash, Ohio, Conyears-Ervin said in the correspondence, she was approached by a young man who recognized her and made a comment about her room number, causing her to switch rooms because she was uncomfortable.

In August, Conyears-Ervin said a woman abruptly rushed toward her as she was leaving City Hall.

"I was scared and felt threatened because the woman was a stranger and I did not know if she intended to harm me," Conyears-Ervin said. "The security detail surrounded me and moved me quickly into the vehicle to avoid further incident."

In her complaint, Conyears-Ervin also included several news articles about shootings near her home and said she attends the city's pension fund boards, where there are people with "mental health challenges who pose a threat to my safety, and without the security detail, I could be approached and possibly harmed by any of the individuals who have cases before one of the pension boards."

She also argued that she was at greater risk than her predecessor, Kurt Summers, because she was in a highly contested election with former Ald. Ameya Pawar and Summers was appointed.

In a letter, Conyears-Ervin said three former treasurers were stalked, attacked or harassed. She also said there have been numerous shootings near her West Side home and noted there are three bullet holes in the front window of her house.

Conyears-Ervin's chief of staff

Tiffany Harper wrote to Lightfoot's chief of staff Maurice Classen alleging that canceling the detail was politically motivated. Classen responded four days later that the allegation was "without merit and deeply offensive" and "outlandish," and said the Police Department considered Conyears-Ervin's concerns but found they did not warrant a security detail.

Appeals to Lightfoot

On Aug. 15, Conyears-Ervin emailed Lightfoot directly to request a meeting by the end of the week before her detail was canceled.

The next day, Conyears-Ervin emailed Lightfoot to lament that Classen denied her meeting request.

Conyears-Ervin relayed several of her complaints from the open letter and said she has "deep concerns."

Lightfoot emailed Conyears-Ervin four days later and said her schedule had been jammed but she'd be happy to speak with her after returning from a family vacation. But, Lightfoot said, "I see no basis for rejecting or overruling the CPD's findings."

The cost per officer on a detail is $116,000, without including overtime or a car, Lightfoot said. "Aside from the cost, in this time of violence, we need every officer that we can get on the streets, fighting crime," Lightfoot said.

Lightfoot also personally objected to Conyears-Ervin's chief of staff saying that the threat assessment performed by police had been "political."

"Putting to one side the insulting nature of that claim, what would be 'political' is if I ignored the law enforcement assessment and made a decision untethered from the facts," Lightfoot said. "The last time a mayor did such a thing was for Ald. Ed Burke," referring to the security detail he maintained until he resigned as Finance chair late last year following an FBI raid on his City Hall offices. "... I have no intention of operating like that and I would think you would not want to be in such infamous company."

Conyears-Ervin emailed Lightfoot again three days later to criticize how she handled the process.

"The people of Chicago went to the polls, and with their votes, demanded change, a cleansing of the Do As I Say Boss Politics," Conyears-Ervin wrote. "They cried out for City Hall leaders with progressive ideas, a willingness to work together, a movement for change, and hearts that beat for the people. So here we are, Mayor Lightfoot."

Conyears-Ervin said the suggestion she call 911 was "insulting" and also said any comparisons to Burke "are inappropriate and insulting."

Referencing her background as a first-generation college graduate "who lives in one of the most under-served communities in the city," Conyears-Ervin said she's "not privileged" or "hungry for power."

"My family was bursting with pride to be a part of the historic political legacy that sees eight women of color in prominent offices around Chicago," Conyears-Ervin said. "We are going to be the architects of Chicago's future, and we are role models for little girls, like your daughter and mine, who will admire what strong, purpose driven women can do."

In her last word, Lightfoot defended the police review again and said, "I am moving on."

While Conyears-Ervin, in her interview with the Tribune last week, reiterated her objections to the process she did not criticize the mayor.

"I look forward to working with the mayor on putting that behind us and really moving on because you and I both know the residents really need us, and the residents need us, to work together," Conyears-Ervin said. "That's very important to me. Every day I walk into City Hall, I know what I'm here for and it's for the residents of Chicago. I just try to stay focused on that."

vehicles that are at least partially self-driving. The freight industry is expected to be among the early adopters of autonomous technology, in part because companies can't fill enough truck-driving jobs, said P.S. Sriraj, director of the University of Illinois at Chicago's Urban Transportation Center.

"There's a significant shortage of drivers," Sriraj said. "If you have a shortage of drivers, you have drivers working long hours and compromising their safety."

Gebis does not see the autonomous technology provided by Autobon as a way to replace truck drivers, but as a way to make truck driving less difficult and more safe. He said he has been motivated by the large number of people killed in truck-related crashes, about 10 a day.

"You want to not have fatigue or stress be a factor in driving," Gebis said. "We are thinking of every possible way we can to make the job more enjoyable for drivers."

Gebis, 24, was a student at the University of Illinois at Chicago when he joined a university robotics group, building robots for a U.S. Department of Defensefunded competition.

"From that point on, that was almost the last time my parents saw me ..." said Gebis, whose team won an award in a NASA robotic mining contest. "It was like a full-time unpaid job."

Gebis said he has many family members employed in the trucking industry, and learned about the liability and other problems associated with crashes. He applied his interest in robotics and computer vision to the trucking business. Instead of graduating from college, Gebis was able to convince his father, Robert Gebis, a Polish immigrant and engineer, to quit his job and help start the company. Krystian Gebis has a commercial driver's license, so he can drive big rigs.

Autobon has developed technology that can replace a truck's wind visor, which is the part that goes just above the windshield. The Autobon wind visor is equipped with multidirectional cameras, GPS and other sensors to allow the truck to monitor road conditions and respond.

Inside the truck, the steering wheel, accelerator and brakes react to information provided by the autonomous equipment.
Autobon also is developing an in-cab sun visor that will contain a camera, which can be used to monitor drivers to make sure they aren't nodding off or texting. A remote control operator would be able to monitor drivers and, if necessary, pull a truck over into an emergency lane and stop it, Gebis said. The visor can be turned off when drivers are not driving and need privacy.

The Autobon technology does not allow the truck to change lanes on its own. That will be the job of the driver. The testing will allow Autobon and the Tollway to gain information about how the technology works in real traffic.

"We're engaging with Autobon to develop a better understanding of emerging vehicle technologies and the way these advances could be used to increase safety on our roads," Illinois Tollway Executive Director José Alvarez said in a statement.

itement. Gebis said Autobon's goal is not to sell trucks, but to sell equipment to be installed in trucks, and to sell services to go along with that — from the monitoring of drivers to tools for how to improve deliveries. A price has not yet been set.

"They want to create all the tools for a fleet to retrofit their vehicles and gain the benefit of increased autonomy in their vehicles," said Jerry Quandt, executive director of the Illinois Autonomous Vehicles Association.

Extensive use of autonomous technology for vehicles has already started in the construction, mining and agriculture industries, Quandt said. An example is an autonomous combine, cutting barley in a field. It's also being used in airplanes, with technology controlling most of a typical flight, while pilots monitor the system.

Quandt sees more autonomy coming into the freight business. He noted that certain self-driving features are already in trucks and personal vehicles, such as automatic braking, but newer technology means more autonomy.

"Cruise control took away the pedal, now we're taking away the steering wheel," Quandt said.

Transportation song quiz

Last week's song about hoping to see someone on a city train was a big hit for a guy who has an enormous urban model train layout. The song is "Downtown Train," by Tom Waits, which was a hit for model train buff Rod Stewart. John Sagan, of Evanston, knew all these facts, and had them first.

It's time to get back in the rig and on the road. But first, one more cup of coffee. What's the song and who wrote it? The first person with the right answers gets a Tribune pen, and glory. I post answers on Twitter at noon, Monday, @marywizchicago.

Since human error is behind more than 90% of fatal wrecks, boosters of autonomous vehicles say their increased use could save lives. But there are also questions about the still-developing technology, including the problem that drivers assigned to be behind the wheel could get bored, and therefore may not react as quickly in an emergency.

Uber Technologies stopped its self-driving car operation in Arizona in 2018 after a pedestrian was killed. The operator had been distracted by her cellphone, according to the National Transportation Safety Board. In a report last week, the board blamed an "inadequate safety culture" at Uber, and called on federal regulators to create a review process before allowing automated test vehicles to operate on public roads.

"I think the federal government is relying too much on the companies to certify this is safe," said Larry Willis, president of the Transportation Trades Department of the AFL-CIO, a labor organization.

There is also concern about how autonomous vehicles could hurt jobs in transportation fields. A University of Pennsylvania research paper last year predicted that autonomous technology could replace some 294,000 long-distance truck drivers in the next 25 years.

But full, driverless autonomy for trucks is years away, Gebis said. Autobon's technology is meant to fit onto trucks already in use, and will focus on small carriers. Gebis thinks that by making driving less stressful, the technology could attract more people into trucking, particularly long-haul trucking. He noted there are other jobs truck drivers do besides driving, such as unloading equipment.

"It's going to take longer than people think for widespread, fully driverless vehicles," Gebis said. "The driver is going to be needed for a long time."

Glimpse inside China's mass detention camps

Associated Press

The watch towers, double-locked doors and video surveillance in the Chinese camps are there "to prevent escapes." Uighurs and other minorities held inside are scored on how well they speak the dominant Mandarin language and follow strict rules on everything down to bathing and using the toilet, scores that determine if they can leave.

"Manner education" is mandatory, but "vocational skills improvement" is offered only after a year in the Voluntary job training is the reason the Chinese government has given for detaining more than a million ethnic minorities, most of them Muslims. But a classified blueprint leaked to a consortium of news organizations shows the camps what former detainees have described: Forced ideological and behavioral reeducation centers run in secret.

The documents lay out the Chinese government's deliberate strategy to lock up ethnic minorities even before they commit a crime, to rewire their thoughts and the language they speak.

The papers also show how Beijing is pioneering social control using data and artificial intelligence. Drawing on data collected by mass surveillance technology, computers issued the names of tens of thousands of people for interrogation or detention in just one week.

The documents give the most significant description yet of high-tech mass detention in the 21st century in the words of the Chinese government itself. Experts say they spell out a vast system that targets, surveils and grades entire ethnicities to forcibly assimilate and subdue them - especially Uighurs, a predominantly Muslim Turkic minority of more than 10 million people with their own language and

"They confirm that this is a form of cultural genocide," said Adrian Zenz, a leading security expert on the far western region of Xinjiang, the Uighur homeland. "It really shows that from the onset, the Chinese government had a plan."

Zenz said the documents echo the aim of the camps as outlined in a 2017 report from a local branch of the Xinjiang Ministry of Justice: To "wash brains, cleanse hearts, support the right, remove the wrong."

China has struggled for decades to control Xinjiang, where the Uighurs have long resented Beijing's heavyhanded rule. After the 9/11 attacks, Chinese officials began justifying harsh security measures and religious restrictions as necessary to fend off terrorism, arguing that young Uighurs were susceptible to the influence of Islamic extremism. Hundreds have died since in terror attacks, reprisals and race riots, both Uighurs and Han Chinese.

In 2014, Chinese President Xi Jinping launched a "People's War on Terror" when bombs set off by Uighur militants tore through a train station in Urumqi, the capital of Xinjiang, just hours after he concluded his first state visit and snares below," state media cited Xi as saying. "Cracking down severely on violent terrorist activities must be the focus of our current struggle."

In 2016, the crackdown intensified after Xi named Chen Quanguo, a hardline official transferred from Tibet, as Xinjiang's new head. Most of the documents were issued in 2017, as Xinjiang's "War on Terror" morphed into an extraordinary mass detention campaign using military-style technology.

The practices largely continue today. The Chinese government says they work. "Since the measures have been taken, there's no single terrorist incident in the past three years," said a written response from the Chinese Embassy in the United Kingdom. "Xinjiang is much safer. The so-called leaked documents are fabrication and fake news."

But the documents confirm from the government itself what is known about the camps from the testimony of dozens of Uighurs and Kazakhs, satellite imagery and tightly monitored visits by journalists to the region.

Erzhan Qurban, an ethnic Kazakh who moved back to Kazakhstan, was grabbed by police on a trip back to China to see his mother and accused of committing crimes abroad. He protested that he was a simple herder who had done nothing wrong. But for the authorities, his time in Kazakhstan was reason enough for de-

Qurban told the AP he was locked in a cell with 10 others last year and told not to engage in "religious activities." They were forced to sit on plastic stools in rigid postures for hours at a time. Talk was forbidden, and two guards kept watch 24 hours a day. Inspectors checked that nails were short and faces trimmed of mustaches and beards, traditionally worn by pious Muslims.

Those who disobeyed were forced to squat or spend 24 hours in solitary confinement in a frigid

"It wasn't education; it was just punishment," said Qurban, who was held for nine months.

Hong Kong's pro-democracy candidates post huge gains

By Ken Moritsugu AND EILEEN NG Associated Press

HONG KONG - Prodemocracy candidates won nearly half of the seats in Hong Kong's local elections, according to partial returns Monday, as voters sent a clear signal of support for the anti-government protests that rocked the Chinese territory for more than five months.

A record 71% of the city's 4.1 million registered voters cast ballots Sunday, election officials said.

So far, pro-democracy candidates won 201 out of 452 seats in 18 district councils. Previously, the bloc had fewer than a third of the seats.

Among the winners were former student leaders and a candidate who replaced prominent activist Joshua Wong, the only person barred from running in the election. Rally organizer Jimmy Sham, who was beaten by hammer-wielding assailants last month, also triumphed, as did a pro-democracy lawmaker who had part of his ear bitten off by an assailant.

Hong Kong's largest pro-Beijing political party suffered the biggest setback, with at least 155 of its 182 candidates defeated. Among the losing incumbents was controversial lawmaker Junius Ho, who was stabbed with a knife while campaigning this camp hailed its strong gains in the normally low-key race as a "victory" for the Hong Kong people. Candidates said the city's embattled Chief Executive Carrie Lam must heed protesters' demands including free elections for the city's leader and legislature, and an independent probe into alleged police brutality.

"We won a small battle today but it shows that Hong Kong people have a chance to win the war," said Henry Sin Ho-fai, a prodemocracy candidate who

The record turnout nowed "a great showed great groundswell in Hong Kong who believes in democracy," said David Alton, a member of the British House of Lords who is among the international election observers invited by Hong Kong's civil society groups.

During the months of demonstrations, protesters have smashed storefronts of businesses seen as sympathetic to China, torched toll booths, shut down a major tunnel and engaged in pitched battles with police, countering tear gas volleys and water cannons with torrents of gasoline bombs. More than 5,000 people have been arrested in the unrest that contributed to Hong Kong's first recession in a decade.

Voter Christina Li said it was important for older people like herself to support the youth at the forefront of the protests.

"Younger generations might not be able to enjoy the rights that we are enjoying now," she said as she waited in line outside a polling station. "We cannot take it for granted."

Many in Hong Kong share the concern of protesters about growing Chinese influence over the former British colony, which was returned to China in 1997. The protests started in June over a now-abandoned extradition bill that would send criminal suspects for trials in mainland China. But the movement has since swelled into an anti-China campaign.

Voting was peaceful amid tight security, with hardly anyone seen wearing protesters' trademark black clothing or face masks. Many voters turned up early to cast their ballots, leading to long lines that extended for blocks.

The vote is the only fully democratic one in Hong Kong. Members of the legislature are chosen partly by popular vote and partly by interest groups representing different sectors of society, and the city's leader is picked by a 1,200-member body that is dominated by supporters of the central government in Beijing.

There has been a rare break in the violence in recent days as protesters, eager to validate their cause at the ballot box, hit the pause button to ensure the polls wouldn't be postponed.

Lam, who is reviled by the protesters, said after voting Sunday morning that she hoped the calm will last.

"I hope that the election will show that everyone doesn't want Hong Kong to return to chaos again, that we want a way out of this crisis so that we can have a fresh start," Lam said.

Pope Francis meets survivors of the 1945 atomic bombing by the United States on Sunday in Hiroshima, Japan.

Pope calls for a nuclear weapon-free world

By Christopher WHITE

The Washington Post

In a highly anticipated address, Pope Francis stood Sunday on the sites where in 1945 the United States detonated nuclear weapons on Hiroshima and Nagasaki killing over 100,000 civilians - and called for a world "free from nuclear weapons."

"The use of atomic energy for purposes of war is immoral," Francis said. "We will be judged on this."

While the pope's call for nuclear disarmament has been lauded by current political and religious leaders, that position raised warning flags decades ago for many prominent U.S. bishops and even the Vatican under Francis' predecessor, Pope John Paul II. While never endorsing the arms race, John Paul saw nuclear deterrence as justified to fight Soviet communism, despite the fact that in 1963, Pope John XXIII — known as the "peace pope" — had said that nuclear weapons should be banned. On Sunday, Pope Francis called on all governments to stop participating in the nuclear weapons complex

"Our response to the threat of nuclear weapons must be joint and concerted, inspired by the arduous yet constant effort to build mutual trust and thus surmount the current climate of distrust," the pope said.

His speech comes at an especially critical place, Hiroshima, and at a critical moment. Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe is attempting to revise the country's constitution to allow for rearmament and global spending toward the stockpile of arms continues to

While the timing and the place are significant, Francis has made similar suggestions before. At a Vatican conference on disarmament in 2017, he said that the possession of nuclear weapons must be "firmly condemned" because of the possibility of an accidental detonation.

Crime scene evidence markers are seen Saturday in the parking lot of the Searles Elementary School in Union City, Calif.

2 boys, 11 and 14, die in Calif. school parking lot shooting

BY KIM BELLWARE The Washington Post

Two boys were found shot to death in the parking lot of a San Francisco Bay Area elementary school early Saturday, authorities say, unsettling a community where homicides are rare.

The discovery came after multiple residents called 911 just before 1:30 a.m. Saturday to report hearing gunshots coming from Searles Elementary School, whose small campus is tucked in a residential neighborhood.

Police found an 11-yearold and a 14-year-old alone in a van, both with gunshot wounds, Union City, California, police said in a statement Saturday. The older boy was pronounced dead at the scene, while the younger child died while being taken to a hospital. Gigi Erickson, who lives in the neighborhood, told CBS San Francisco that she awoke to the sound of gunshots.

"All of a sudden, we heard this pop, pop, pop, pop, I mean it just kept going, it almost sounded like a machine-gun type, I mean it was just constant," Erickson said.

Erickson wondered why the boys were in a van at the school so late at night and added, "I'm just so heartbroken that these kids had to go through that."

Police said it was unclear why the boys were in the parked van so late at night or whether they had an adult with them.

Police were not releasing the names of the victims because they are minors. Late Saturday, police were still investigating whether the boys were approached by one or more perpetrators on foot or in a car and were searching for a motive.

Neighbors reported hearing between 15 and 20 gunshots - an unusual occurrence in what one resident described to CBS as a quiet neighborhood. The New Haven Unified School District confirmed late Saturday that the one of the victims was a student in the district, while the other was a former student.

John Thompson, superintendent of the school district, said in a statement that the district would have "support for our students and staff at the sites where these students attended when school resumes after the Thanksgiving break."

"We also work closely with the Union City Police Department to ensure that our schools are as safe as they can be," Thompson said.

Police noted a nonfatal double shooting early Wednesday morning just a half-mile from the site of Saturday's double homicide but said there is no evidence that the incidents are Homicides are rare occurrences in Union City: The city of roughly 75,000 people half an hour southeast of San Francisco has registered only one homicide per year since 2016, according to city data.

Pentagon chief fires Navy secretary over SEAL dispute

By Robert Burns Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Defense Secretary Mark Esper on Sunday fired the Navy's top official, ending a stunning clash between President Donald Trump and top military leadership over the fate of a SEAL accused of war crimes in Iraq.

Esper said he had lost confidence in Navy Secretary Richard Spencer and alleged that Spencer proposed a deal with the White House behind his back to resolve the SEAL's case. Trump has championed the matter of Navy Chief Petty Officer Edward Gallagher, who was acquitted of murder in the stabbing death of an Islamic State militant captive but convicted of posing with the corpse while in Iraq in 2017.

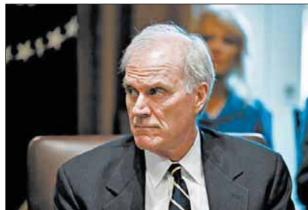

Spencer's firing exposed fissures in Trump's relationship with the highest ranks of the U.S. military and raised questions about the appropriate role of a commander in chief in matters of military justice.

Gallagher was demoted from chief petty officer to a 1st class petty officer after his conviction by a military jury. Trump, however, restored Gallagher's rank this month.

The situation escalated again in recent days.

On Wednesday, the Navy had notified Gallagher that he would face a Navy SEAL review board to determine if he should be allowed to remain in the elite force. While Trump then tweeted that he would not allow the Navy to remove Gallagher from the SEALs by taking away his Trident Pin, which designates a SEAL member, the White House told the Navy it could proceed as planned, according to a Navy officer who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal matters.

That initially appeared to defuse the situation. The board was due to hear Gallagher's case on Dec. 2.

Spencer, speaking Sat-urday at an international security forum in Nova Scotia, said he did not consider a tweet by Trump a formal order to stop the Navy

"I need a formal order to act," Spencer said. He said of Trump's tweets, "I don't interpret them as a formal order."

But on Sunday, Esper said he had learned that Spencer had "privately" proposed to the White House that Gallagher be allowed to retire in his current rank and without losing his status as a SEAL. Esper said Spencer had not told him of the proposal to the White House, causing him to lose "trust and confi-

A spokesperson for Spencer, Navy Cmdr. Sarah Higgins, said Spencer had no immediate comment. The White House did not provide details of Spencer's alleged private proposal regarding Gallagher.

NHAC NGUYEN/GETTY-AFP

Esper also directed on Sunday that Gallagher be allowed to retire at the end of this month, and that the review board scheduled to hear his case be canceled. At Esper's direction, Gallagher will be allowed to retire as a SEAL at his current rank.

Chief Pentagon spokesman Jonathan Hoffman said Esper's position had been that the Navy's disciplinary process should be allowed to "play itself out objectively and deliberately."

In the written statement, Esper said of Spencer: "I am deeply troubled by this conduct shown by a senior DOD official. Unfortunately, as a result I have determined that Secretary Spencer no longer has my confidence to continue in his position."

Trump said he was nominating Kenneth Braithwaite, a retired Navy rear admiral and the current U.S. ambassador to Norway, to succeed Spencer.

Schiff: Panel to press ahead with impeachment report

BY FELICIA SONMEZ AND ELISE VIEBECK The Washington Post

House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff, D-Calif., said Sunday that his panel will press ahead with its impeachment report even though key witnesses have not testified, in the latest signal that Democrats are moving swiftly in their probe of President Donald Trump's alleged efforts to pressure Ukraine.

In an interview on CNN's "State of the Union," Schiff said the evidence against Trump is "already over-whelming," although he stopped short of saying whether he would support impeachment himself.

Yes, we'd love to have these witnesses come in," Schiff said. "But we're not willing to simply allow them to wait us out — to stall this proceeding when the facts are already overwhelming."

Democrats are seeking to prove Trump leveraged military assistance and an Oval Office meeting in exchange for investigations of former Vice President Joe Biden and his son Hunter Biden and a debunked theory concerning purported Ukrainian interference in the 2016 presidential election.

Several key figures, including acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, Vice President Mike Pence, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, former national security adviser John Bolton and Trump attorney Rudy Giuliani, have declined to cooperate

A federal judge is expected to rule Monday on whether former White House counsel Donald Mc-Gahn must testify under subpoena.

Some have argued that Democrats should litigate the matter in the courts to force more witnesses to testify. But Schiff said Sunday that time is of the essence and that Democrats will continue to investigate even after they have submitted their report to the House Judiciary Commit-

"The investigation isn't going to end," he said, adding that "we may have other depositions and hearings to

He took aim at Bolton, arguing that the former national security adviser will have to explain why he chose to give his account of events "in a book" rather than show the "courage" that Fiona Hill, the former National Security Council Russia adviser, did in testifying before lawmakers last

Schiff declined to say how long it might take impeachment investigators to finish their report, saying "we'll take the time that's necessary."

Trump, meanwhile, continued to take aim at Democrats, saying in a tweet on Sunday that they "are not getting important legislation done" because of the impeachment inquiry.

"USMCA, National Defense Authorization Act, Gun Safety, Prescription Drug Prices, & Infrastructure are dead in the water because of the Dems!" Trump said, referring to the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement and other mat-

Trump also claimed public opinion has "turned very strongly against Impeachment, especially in swing states," though national polls have shown that public sentiment has remained

According to an NPR-PBS-Marist poll, 49 percent of respondents supported removing Trump from office in mid-November, up from 48 percent in early October in another NPR-

PBS-Marist poll.

Administration officials and other Republicans on Sunday continued to defend Trump and sought to keep the focus on Biden, who is running for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination.

White House counselor Kellyanne Conway argued that there was no quid pro quo because Ukraine eventually received its military aid and Trump met with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskiy on the sidelines of the U.N. General Assembly in late September.

Conway also dismissed the notion that last week's testimony strengthened Democrats' hand, claiming that she sees swing-district Democrats "wringing their hands" over what to do.

"I think defense will go on offense if there is a Senate trial, and we'll be able to call witnesses, we'll be able to challenge their witnesses, produce other evidence," Conway said on CBS News' "Face the Na-

She added, "We simply can't impeach and remove a democratically elected president from office because they didn't beat him in 2016, they haven't a clue how to beat him in 2020, (and) they don't much like him."

Rep. Jim Himes, D-Conn., a member of the House Intelligence Committee, said he was "pretty sure that every single one" of Conway's assertions was "inaccurate," noting that Ukraine received its military aid and Trump met with Zelenskiy in New York only after a whistleblower made the complaint that triggered the impeachment inquiry.

"I understand that the White House is all about making facts slippery," Himes said. "When the jig was up, yes, then the aid was released, once (Trump and his allies) were caught."

Himes also challenged Conway's claim that Democrats in Congress were losing faith in the allegations.

"I don't think any Democrat in the Congress looked at what happened over the last two weeks and said, 'Gosh, there's nothing there,' "Himes said, adding: "Every single day, every single piece of testimony brought up new informathe president. It's unclear if the Mulvaney discussions or other records pose any legal problems for Trump in the impeachment inquiry, but some fear they could pose political problems if revealed publicly.

People familiar with the Office of Budget and Management's handling of the holdup in aid acknowledged the internal discussions going on during August, but characterized the conversations as calm, routine and focused on the legal question of how to comply with the congressional Budget and Impoundment Act, which requires the executive branch to spend congressionally appropriated funds unless Congress agrees they can be rescinded.

"There was a legal consensus at every step of the way that the money could be withheld to conduct the policy review," said OMB spokeswoman Rachel Semmel. "OMB works closely with agencies on executing the budget. Routine practices and procedures were followed, not scrambling."

The hold on the military aid is at the heart of House Democrats' investigation into whether the president should be removed from office for allegedly trying to pressure Ukraine into investigating his political rivals in exchange for the U.S. support that President Volodymyr Zelenskiy desperately wanted in the face of Russian military aggres-

In the early August email exchanges, Mulvaney asked acting Office of Management and Budget director Russell Vought for an update on the legal rationale for withholding the aid and how much longer it could be delayed. Trump had made the decision the previous month without an assessment of the reasoning or legal justification, according to two White House officials. Emails show Vought and OMB staffers arguing that withholding aid was legal, while officials at the National Security Council and State Department protested. OMB lawyers said that it was legal to withhold the aid, as long as they deemed it a "temporary" hold, according to people familiar with the review.

A senior budget lawver crafted a memo on July 25 that defended the hold for at least a short period of time, an administration official said.

Mulvaney's request for information came days after the White House Counsel's Office was put on notice that an anonymous CIA official had made a complaint to the agency's general counsel about Trump's July 25 call to Zelenskiy during which he requested Ukraine investigate former Vice President Joe Biden and his son, Hunter, as well as an unfounded theory that Ukraine interfered in the 2016 U.S. presidential elec-

This official would later file a whistleblower complaint with the intelligence community's inspector general, which ignited the impeachment push when its existence became public.

The White House released the funds to Ukraine on Sept. 11. The timing has drawn scrutiny because it came two days after the House announced it was launching an inquiry into the whistleblower complaint, which raised concerns about the call and whether the president was using his public office for personal political gain. Trump has acknowledged ordering the hold on military aid and also pressing Ukraine's president to investigate his potential Democratic presidential opponent, Joe Biden, but said the release of the funds was not conditioned on Ukraine launching any investigations.

The office of White House Counsel Pat Cipollone oversaw the records review. The White House press office and the White House Counsel's Office did not respond to requests for comment. Mulvaney's lawyer, Robert Driscoll, declined to comment.

The document research has only exacerbated growing tension between Cipollone and Mulvaney and their offices, with Cipollone tightly controlling access to his findings, and Mulvaney's aides complaining Cipollone isn't briefing other White House officials or sharing important material they need to respond to public inquiries, according to people familiar with their relationship.

Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg was released Sunday after a brief hospitalization.

RBG released from hospital, high court says

By Robert Barnes The Washington Post

After being hospitalized Friday night with chills and a fever, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg was released Sunday and is at home "doing well," according to a short statement from the Supreme Court.

The court provided no additional details. It announced in a news release Saturday evening that the 86-year-old justice had been seen Friday night at Sibley Hospital in Washington, D.C., and then transferred to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore for treatment of a possible infection.

"With intravenous antibiotics and fluids, her symptoms have abated," the court said in the Saturday release.

The health of Ginsburg, the leader of the court's liberal wing, is a matter of constant attention and speculation.

She announced on Aug. 23 that she had completed a three-week course of stereotactic ablative radiation therapy - a highly focused treatment that concentrates an intense dose of  $radiation\ on\ a\ tumor-after$ a malignancy was discovered on her pancreas.

It was the second treatment for cancer in nine months for Ginsburg. She had a portion of her left lung removed in December and in past decades was treated for colon and pancreatic cancer. She broke her ribs in a fall in November 2018, which resulted in the discovery of the lung cancer.

Pence reassures Kurdish allies during surprise trip to Iraq

IRBIL, Iraq — Vice President Mike Pence worked to reassure the United States' Kurdish allies in an unannounced trip to Iraq on Saturday, the highest-level American trip since President Donald Trump ordered a pullback of U.S. forces in Syria two months ago.

Flying in a C-17 military cargo aircraft, Pence landed in Irbil, capital of Iraq's semiautonomous Kurdish region, to meet with Iraqi Kurdistan President Nechirvan Barzani.
The visit was meant to hearten the United States' regional partners in the fight against Islamic State after the U.S. pulled troops from northern Syria.

Asked if the U.S. was facing a sense of betrayal from Iraqi and Syrian Kurdish allies, Pence said both groups, including Syrian Kurdish forces "who fought alongside us," had no doubts about the U.S. commitment to them.

Michael Bloomberg launches Democratic presidential bid

NEW YORK — Billionaire and former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, one of the world's richest men, has formally launched a Democratic bid for president

Ending weeks of speculation, the 77-year-old former Republican announced his candidacy Sunday in a written statement posted on a campaign website describing himself as uniquely positioned to defeat President Donald Trump. He will quickly follow with a massive advertising campaign blanketing airways in key primary states across the U.S.

"I'm running for president to defeat Donald Trump and rebuild America," Bloomberg wrote.

"We cannot afford four more years of President Trump's reckless and unethical actions," he said.

Suspect in custody in shooting death of Alabama sheriff

HAYNEVILLE, Ala. — Law enforcement agencies in Alabama and beyond posted messages of condolences on social media Sunday in the aftermath of the fatal weekend shooting of a sheriff in the state Few details were immediately available about the circumstances surrounding Saturday evening's shooting and the capture of a suspect hours later.

Gov. Kay Ivey tweeted that Lowndes County Sheriff John Williams had been "tragically killed" in the line of duty and that she offered her prayers and sympathy to his family and the county sheriff's department.

The suspect in custody was identified as William Chase Johnson, 18.

It was unclear what, if any, role race played in the shooting. The sheriff was African American.

13 dead in 1 of the 'worst' days of protest in southern Iraq

BAGHDAD — Thirteen anti-government protesters were killed Sunday by Iraqi security forces in one of the "worst" days of clashes in the country's south, as protests swept through the oil-rich area, officials said.

Demonstrators outraged by rampant government corruption and poor services burned tires and blocked main road arteries.

Seven protesters were killed in the southern province of Basra, near the Umm Qasr port, when Iraqi authorities used live fire and tear gas to disperse them, said security and hospital officials, who requested anonymity in line with regulations.

One security official in Basra said it was "one of the worst" days since the start of the protest movement. At least 150 protesters were wounded in clashes across southern Iraq.

Four protesters were killed in Nassiriya province, and one killed in both Najaf, the seat of Iraq's Shiite religious authority, and Diwanieh provinces

is no indication that the protest movement has impacted production.

UAW official charged in corruption probe resigns

DETROIT — A United Auto Workers union official charged in a widening federal bribery and embezzlement scandal has resigned.

The union said Sunday that Vance Pearson also will retire and resign from his membership in the union. He had been on paid administrative leave.

Pearson was the director of a region in Missouri. He was charged by federal prosecutors in September in connection with a scheme to embezzle union money and spend thousands on premium booze, golf clubs, cigars and swanky stays in California.

Former UAW President Gary Jones has been implicated in the scheme but has not been charged. Jones resigned last week.

The UAW had moved to expel both men from the union.

So far, 13 people have been charged in the federal investigation.

Illinois lawmakers try to skirt the impact of Janus

WHY GOV. PRITZKER SHOULD SAY NO

Since June 27, 2018, when the U.S. Supreme Court limited the ability of public employees unions to collect mandatory dues, Mark Janus has been traveling the country on an information campaign.

Janus is the Springfield plaintiff who worked as a child support specialist for the state of Illinois. He declined to join the union when he was hired in 2007, but he still had to pay partial dues. The Supreme Court ruled in his favor last summer, deciding in a 5-4 opinion that mandatory dues collection from nonunion members violated their constitutional rights. Employees still are free to join unions and pay dues. But the justices said those who don't want to do so cannot be required to "subsidize the speech of other private speakers."

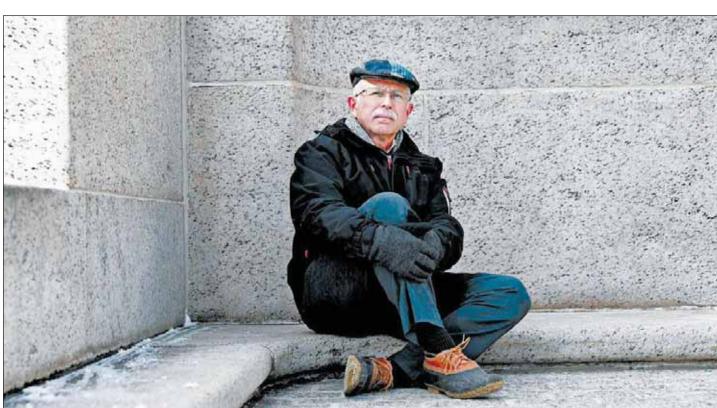

"States and public-sector unions may no longer extract agency fees from nonconsenting employees," Justice Samuel Alito Jr. wrote for the majority. "This procedure violates the First Amendment and cannot continue."

Since then, union-heavy states have been enacting laws to weaken the impact of the Janus decision. Which state probably is next to have such a law? You guessed it. Illinois.

Lawmakers during the fall veto session sent to Gov. J.B. Pritzker legislation that would make it easier for unions to recruit members and harder for employees to know their rights under Janus. Public employers — mostly governments — would be required to provide the names, addresses and contact information of their employees, including personal email addresses and cellphone numbers on file, directly to union bargaining units.

The legislation also severely limits the ability of employers to inform their workers about the choice to join a union or not.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2018

what's right for them," Janus told us Thursday. "It puts people in charge of their membership, not politicians or a union steward. If the governor signs the bill, he's going to keep people in the dark."

For workers who don't want to join a union, the window to opt out would be shortened under the measure. And the bill protects unions from being forced to repay dues previously surrendered by workers like Janus.

That's the second phase of Janus' court battle — getting about $3,000 in dues returned to him from the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Council 31, now that the Supreme Court ruled the taking unconstitutional. "It's not about the money. It's about righting the wrongs of the unions," Janus says.

"We're prepared to ultimately try to go back to the Supreme Court on this issue," says Janus attorney Jeffrey Schwab with the Liberty Justice Center. "We think it's important and doesn't just affect Mark. It affects everyone in Mark's position."

The Janus decision remains a liberating force for public sector employees who don't want to join a union, disagree with a union's mission, or don't want their paychecks slashed to support political and other activity with which they disagree. Ultimately, accepting public service jobs in teaching or corrections or child welfare should not be predicated on joining a union. That's our view.

If Pritzker signs the bill, he will demonstrate once again who actually runs Illinois state government. It's not his administration. It's not the department heads. It's the public employees unions who represent more than 90% of the state workforce. They already have the power. Governor, why give them more?

The emerald ash borer won't surrender

Long before jumping worms gyrated their way to the top of Chicago's list of flora foes, the city locked horns with the emerald ash borer.

Smaller than a penny and sporting a spiffy green sheen, the emerald ash borer first appeared munching on an ash tree at 29th and State streets in 2008. Since then, the voracious beetle has spread throughout most of the city. Chicago suburbs have been hard-hit, as have dozens of counties throughout Illinois.

The emerald ash borer is a death knell for ash trees. Once it has infested, the larvae gorge themselves on the trees' inner bark, disrupting the movement of water and nutrients. In time, the tree dies, and the beetles move on to their next course:

Like many other communities in the region, long ago Chicago began relying on ash as one of its tree species for parkways.

City Hall is smart to pivot from treatment to new plantings

The pest is a more recent arrival — it was first discovered in North America in 2002. The emerald ash borer is native to Asia, and its appearance in U.S. is believed to be linked to shipments packed in wooden crates from China.

Chicago very smartly began inoculating ash trees in 2009 with a pesticide that helped slow the mass death of the city's ash population. At least 65,000 trees have been treated, the city's Department of Streets and Sanitation tells us. In 2012, we praised the city's plan to treat mature ash trees worth saving. "Better a sound plan now than a city denuded at great expense in the space of a few years," we wrote.

Now City Hall says it should transition from lengthening the lives of infested trees to replacing them with new trees. City Hall's 2020 budget calls for a halt to the city's ash treatment program. Instead, the city plans to plant 5,000 trees. At a cost of $500 per tree, that comes to about $2.5 million. Treatment, by contrast, costs between $35 to $40 per tree.

Ash trees that underwent treatment have lived longer than their expected life spans, the city says. If the emerald ash borer doesn't get them, the march of time will. Treatment was never a cure-all, and we agree that at some point, any temporary fix outlives its usefulness. The city will allow homeowners who want to keep their ash trees alive to get permits to continue treatment through a private company.

However, as the city plants new trees, it should remember the folly of relying so heavily on one species. Variety is more than the spice of life. It's vital to maintaining a city's green canopy. Elms were all the rage in parkways until Dutch elm disease wrought havoc on the elm population. The same happened to chestnut trees when chestnut blight took hold. Ash as a parkway tree became a popular choice for municipalities because it was known for its resistance to disease and pests. That was true until it wasn't — until, that is, the emerald ash borer hitched a ride on packing crates to America.

The city will start its tree planting program next year. In this case, less isn't more.

More is better, as in more species. Maple, locust, ginkgo, linden, take your pick. Plant a potpourri. And keep the plantings in city budgets going forward.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

There is perfectly affordable real estate all across the Midwest — in fact, all across most of America outside the largest and most expensive cities on the coasts and in a handful of booming inland markets like Chicago and Austin.

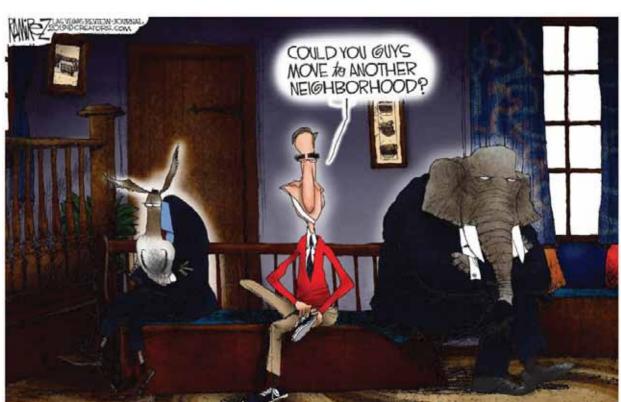

Granted, there are tradeoffs. It goes without saying that you will have more job opportunities in New York than Minneapolis, or in Minneapolis than, say, New Richmond, Indiana, population 333.

But in New York $50,000 gets you nothing; in Minneapolis it gets you a total rehab project or an empty lot, and in New Richmond it gets you 2,000 square feet of gorgeous Victorian woodwork on a quarter acre with central air, multiple porches, an elaborate fireplace and a clawfoot tub.

Cedar Rapids, Milwaukee and Cincinnati aren't San Francisco, but neither are they ghost towns. You can have a job and a house and some non-Netflix nightlife in these places.

Liz Lemon told us years ago: Cleveland! Even we blighted millennials can afford a home in the Midwest.

Restaurant servers and other tipped workers face poverty, harassment and racial disparity on subminimum wage

By Alison Baker

There's a lot that the average person doesn't know about workers who depend on tips for their wages. I am a server in a casual-fine dining restaurant in Logan Square, and I can tell you that the tipped wage system keeps working people in poverty. Too many workers in our city who earn the subminimum tipped wage have difficulty making ends meet or budgeting for their basic necessities of food, shelter and health care.

There are more than 300,000 tipped workers in the Chicago area, including restaurant servers, airport wheelchair attendants, nail salon workers, occupational therapy aides and more. Though providing services that many people depend on, workers like us are only paid a subminimum wage of $6.40 an hour, an amount that is expected to be supplemented by tips from customers to make up the city's full minimum wage of $13 an hour.

The other day, I made just $30 on my shift. I "plan financially" by going with the flow. I don't have retirement or health benefits; I'm just surviving on tips, which is scary and leaves me in a constant state of anxiety about my finances. Most tipped workers are women and, though I am white, nearly 60% of tipped occupations are held by people of color — who fare even

That's why the Raise Chicago, a coalition of low-paid workers like me and other advocates for fair pay, is seeking a phase-out of the tipped subminimum wage in Chicago over the next four years, providing workers

Maintaining the subminimum wage system, which is a legacy of slavery, helps sustain racial inequities in our city. A recently released study by Restaurant Opportunities Centers with a $15 an hour wage by 2023.

Restaurant Opportunities Centers United found that black tipped workers in Chicago receive less in tips than their white counterparts, even when their guest reviews have indicated they outperformed white tipped workers. They live in poverty nearly three times the rate of the city's overall workforce.

Having to completely rely on tips to pay our bills puts us in danger: We must please customers, otherwise we don't make money. Bosses also have outsized power by being able to dictate what kind of shifts we work and ultimately, how many tips we can earn. Throughout my time in the restaurant industry, I've experienced countless horrendous acts of sexual harassment and witnessed them happening to my co-workers. I've been touched and followed by customers and have even been offered hotel keys in lieu of tips. A friend of mine was murdered at 21 years old by a regular customer of the restaurant where she used to work.

By eliminating the subminimum tipped wage system and moving to one fair wage for all workers, Chicago would be proactively protecting women against sexual harassment on the job.

It's important to note that eliminating the subminimum wage does not mean eliminating tips all together. Instead, it would allow tipping to work as most patrons intend: as a bonus for good service, rather than something necessary to make up the shortfall in workers' paychecks because employers have passed the buck.

By eliminating the subminimum tipped wage, Mayor Lori Lightfoot and the City Council can send a message to tipped workers and those who employ us that our time is valuable, our labor is valuable, our families are valuable, and that we shouldn't be subject to harassment and other threats on the job.

'The Report' is not just a movie

Americans need the full truth about the CIA's torture program

By Hina Shamsi

The new movie "The Report" is a powerful telling of the story of the Senate investigation into the horrors of the CIA's torture program and the fight to allow the public to see what the government had done in its name.

Yet to this day, the full 6,700-page report produced by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence detailing the CIA's post-Sept. 11 program of detention, torture and other abuse of detainees remains secret after years of litigation.

The CIA called its methods "enhanced interrogation," a euphemism for torture used to break minds and bodies to induce fear and despair. The techniques included waterboarding and other simulated drowning, physical violence, sleep deprivation from continuously blaring music, nudity and forced standing in painful positions for hours. None of this is legal, but the CIA sought to justify its cruelty by claiming it resulted in accurate information. Our country then engaged in a debased debate about the effectiveness of torture, which the executive summary of the report subsequently put to rest. It concluded the program did not yield any meaningful intelligence.

The Obama administration succeeded in preventing the full report from being made public, but at least the executive summary was released in 2014.

Because of that disclosure, two survivors of torture and the family of a third torture victim were able to sue two psychologists who collaborated with the CIA on the torture program, resulting in a settlement. The case set an important precedent, showing that the courts can handle lawsuits challenging intelligence community abuses committed in the name of national security. Still, the stories of most other victims and survivors of torture — mainly Muslim black and brown men who bore the brunt of these government abuses of power — remain largely untold.

The public needs to see the full report to know the extent of the harms done, as well as the details of the CIA's misrepresentations to Congress, the courts and the media about its abuses. The executive branch needs to have and read the report and learn its lessons, as Congress intended. Full transparency is immensely impor-

transparency is immensely important for public accountability and for torture victims and their families, who are still suffering. One man depicted in "The Report," Gul Rahman, was tortured and killed in a CIA prison in Afghanistan in 2002. His family is suing the CIA, which is still refusing to reveal what it did with his body. Seventeen years after Gul Rahman was killed, his family yearns to give him a decent burial. As for other survivors and their families? The U.S. government has never provided an apology or official recognition of the physical and mental harm people endured, let alone reparations or rehabilitation services.

Many U.S. government torture architects, perpetrators and proponents continue to shape policy and practice in the administration. Gina Haspel, who oversaw secret torture and detention sites, now heads the CIA. Marshall Billingslea, who advocated the use of torture in the Bush administration, is now assistant secretary for terrorist financing at the Treasury Department and a nominee for a crucial human rights position at the State Department.

And of course, there's Donald Trump, who made a campaign pledge to bring back torture. He has not succeeded in reviving those practices, but he has granted pardons to military service members accused or convicted of war crimes.

Congress must ensure full disclosure of the Senate investigation report and hold the perpetrators accountable, instead of confirming them to leadership positions in the administration. Impunity for government officials who commit crimes means this country's oversight and justice systems will be further weakened and seen as inept.

The victims and survivors deserve recompense and rehabilitation for their shattered lives. How this story ends is a test for how we recover the moral and legal principles destroyed by the officials who created and supported the torture program.

Idle Boeing 737 Max planes are parked at Grant County International Airport in Moses Lake, Wash. on Oct. 23

Get Boeing and the FAA out of the air safety inspection process

By Christine Negroni

The crashes of two Boeing 737 Max aircraft within the span of five months raises the question: Who is making sure airplanes are safe?

Don't be too quick to reply. Yes, the Federal Aviation Administration's mission is to "provide the safest, most efficient aerospace system in the world," but for decades it has shared the burden with the companies whose products it certifies

When it came to approving the design of the Max, that partnership did not work. But before deciding that private companies cannot act in the FAA's stead, consider this.

Between 1921 and 1925, Underwriters Laboratories (known as UL) was responsible for making sure planes were safe. It employed 33 inspectors who created manufacturing standards and inspected and certified the finished airplanes, according to Rachel Madden, a UL archivist.

Insurance companies were the first to recognize that aviation needed oversight, though it wasn't long before Congress passed the federal Air Commerce Act, paving the way for the FAA.

Northbrook-based UL continues to validate new technology, such as lithiumion batteries and autonomous vehicles, as part of what Madden describes as "work for the safety of people."

But UL had nothing to do with the 737 Max. Safety of the Max was the responsibility of the FAA and Boeing. Fresh from receiving a certificate of airworthiness in 2017, Max jetliners in Indonesia and Ethiopia plunged to earth, leaving 346 people dead

Now, some of us active in air safety are wondering if UL's past role might provide a road map for the future. "There is no reason why an organization like the FAA should have to hire Ph.D.s and have enough technical people to keep up with Boeing," said Sandy Murdock, a former deputy administrator of the FAA. "We should have Underwriters Labs do the work and have Boeing pay for it."

To be clear, UL wasn't enthusiastic about the idea when I presented it. But that's not the point. If private labs can do what the FAA lacks the funds and personnel to do for itself, and if users of the certification process were required to pay for the testing, that truly would be revolutionary. "There's no question the current system is broken and it needs reform urgently and immediately," Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., told me recently.

The 737 Max had new engines that required new flight control software. But the FAA was not aware of how the new software would impact the plane's flying characteristics. Nor could it say if Boeing's hazards analysis was adequate, according to an international review board. These issues were attributed in part to programs that give manufacturers such as Boeing authority to police themselves.

"We identified shortcomings," said Christopher Hart, the former chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, who chaired the review commit-

Giving companies such as Boeing the ability to certify their own products is a workload-shedding, budget-saving practice that has been used for decades. Just before the Lion Air disaster in Singapore, even more power was given to airplane manufacturers through the 2018 FAA Reauthorization Act.

Although the FAA discouraged transferring more authority to manufacturers, claiming it would "not be in the best interest of safety," then-acting FAA Administrator Daniel Elwell said some delegation was essential. Taking back all the tasks associated with certifying new airplanes would require an additional $1.8 billion and a 10,000-person increase in its staff, Elwell said during a Senate hearing in March.

Looking at the example set by UL as the nation's first air safety arbiter, we can see the value of bringing independent specialists into a process that is too reliant on the expertise of manufacturers who are in turn motivated by the bottom line.

Perhaps the inadequate testing of Max software would have been detected had it been subjected to outside review. "It would be safer for the public if the testing of the software was not being driven by the company trying to make the product," said Eric Proegler, president of the Association for Software Testing. It takes time and knowledge to simulate all the ways software can fail, he said, and it "is unlikely that regulators can do it."

Time and expertise usually means expensive. Should manufacturers cover that cost? Former FAA official Murdock says yes. "The one document that goes in through the front door of the FAA's head-quarters and comes back out, and in the transition gains the greatest economic value, is a type certificate," Murdock said. "You can sell that airplane anywhere in the world."

In 2017, the year the Max made its first commercial flight, it was already the fastest-selling airliner in Boeing history. Boeing closed out the year with record operating cash flow and $93.4 billion in revenues.

In my 25 years in aviation, I've seen many proposals crash and burn. Boeing and other aviation stakeholders will not likely warm to the idea of paying for the privilege of more robust oversight.

Yet aviation is as safe as it is today because of scrupulous attention to creating and enforcing safety standards. That began nearly a century ago, not in a government office but in a private lab.

Cost of watching the Cubs too high

The cost of the new Cubs cable channel is estimated to be between $6-$15 per month. I'm surprised that fans — old and new — are not up in arms over this.

For years, WGN televised Cubs games at no charge, thus developing a nationwide fan base that still exists. The Cubs organization has capitalized on this fan base more and more each year. Ticket prices, along with the proverbial peanuts and Cracker Jacks, are presently prohibitive for most families.

Not only was the end of last season a disaster, but now we're being insulted by the ill-timed launch of a cable channel. Perhaps the Cubs might try a goodwill promotion such as a one-year complimentary membership to their channel. Let them prove they deserve our continued loyalty at an even higher price.

Our obsession with looks

I was recently watching some episodes of "20/20" and "Dateline." They're the same type of show. Somebody gets murdered or disappears, and the hosts walk you through the investigation to find the perpetrator. What they also do is interview family members and ask them to describe the person murdered or missing. In each interview, the person is described in a number of ways, but all of them are also described using some term to call out how attractive they were. They were so: beautiful, pretty, good-looking, handsome. Really? Is that something that makes any difference, is that something of any real value?

When people first see a baby, what are the first words out of their mouth (even if the baby's head and face look squashed like a prune)? Your baby is so: adorable, cute, beautiful and the like. Isn't sad that we focus on looks from childbirth?

When you ask people to tell you about their family, it's usually just a matter of seconds before you hear them say things like: I have two beautiful children, I have three adorable little ones, I have a beautiful teenage girl or such a handsome son.

When you hear people talking about actors and actresses, how many seconds do you have to wait before the conversation turns to looks (regardless of whether or not it's men or women talking)? I think so-and-so is so: hot, gorgeous, sexylooking, striking, fine.

We are the ones saying these things. So let's forget for a moment about beauty pageants, shows, movies, magazines and websites that objectify men and women, and look at ourselves and what we are doing, the words we choose from the moment someone is born, to contribute to this focus on and sometimes obsession with looks.

It's no wonder that a majority of people are not happy with the way they look. According to one study, by the age of 7, girls feel pressure to look pretty, and more than 35% of girls 7 to 10 were made to feel that their looks are the most important attribute of a person. (This jumps as girls get older.)

So can we stop describing people, in particular our children, by their physical appearance. Is attractiveness really a positive attribute? Is that really what you want to brag about or have your kids be known for? I hope not.

— Bruce Handler, Highland Park

A crisis among our veterans

I was shocked that 20 veterans die by suicide each day ("Politics as usual on Veterans Day," Nation & World, Nov. 12). I think this should be a headline on Page 1 of the Tribune, so that every person who reads the paper is aware of the seriousness of the issue and calls his or her legislator to provide more funding to take care of our veterans.

— Suresh Rao, North Aurora

A shrinking CPS requires more funds?

Enrollment at Chicago Public Schools dropped 10,000 students last year and 6,000 this year. How then does CPS require more money to operate? Should it not be less money due to fewer students requiring less staff and fewer facilities? Only in Chicago does the opposite hold true.

As the first public impeachment hearings transfixed the country with revelations on a recalled ambassador and quid pro quos, America's collective mind was blown by another bombshell.

"Wait so Kiev is pronounced KEEVE (rhymes with Steve)?!?," star political forecaster Nate Silver wondered as many others online marveled that they had been pronouncing the Ukrainian capital wrong their whole lives.

I made a 30-second video explaining

I made a 30-second video explaining the lesson in post-Soviet politics: Kiev is a transliteration from Russian, Kyiv is the preferred Ukrainian transliteration, and after simplifying Ukrainian's guttural vowels for American speakers, the proper pronunciation is "Keeve." It's now my most popular tweet ever; apparently, this is the content Impeachment Twitter craves.

Beneath this quirky language lesson, however, lies a battle over the pages of history that Ukrainians in the era after their Maidan revolution — which began six years ago — have been struggling to rewrite.

Throughout its existence the Ukrain-

Throughout its existence, the Ukrainian nation had been dominated by nearby powers, including Russia, Poland and Austria-Hungary. Before 1991, when Ukraine gained independence from the Soviet Union, it had never existed as an independent state. The lens through which the modern world saw Ukraine was undeniably Russian. The language of higher education, of government and of privilege was Russian.

Ukrainian speakers were often ridiculed as provincial, or even politically, professionally and criminally chastised for their use of their native language. Taras Shevchenko, an artist, poet and Ukrainian national hero whose statue stands near Dupont Circle in Washington and in hundreds of locations across Ukraine, was exiled and sentenced to compulsory military service for promoting Ukrainian independence and writing poetry in Ukrainian, which the authorities referred to as "little Russian."

Since 2014, when Russia illegally annexed Ukraine's Crimean Peninsula and fomented a war in the country's eastern Donbas region, authorities in Kyiv have made a concerted effort at re-Ukrainianization, even down to the name of the capital city itself. It is not just a difference of transliteration but one of history, Ukrainians argue. The legendary founder of Kyiv, from whom the city gets its name is Prince Kyi, not Prince Kie.

The name also has political implications. The Ukrainian Ministry of Foreign Affairs launched the #KyivNotKiev campaign last year to gain recognition for the Ukrainian spelling of the country's cities. "Under the Russian empire and later the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR)," the ministry wrote, "Russification was actively used as a tool to extinguish each constituent country's national identity, culture and language. In light of Russia's war of aggression against Ukraine, including its illegal occupation of Crimea, we are once again experiencing Russification as a tactic that attempts to destabilize and delegitimize our country."

Kyiv has gone to great lengths to protect its information space, undertaking domestic measures that have been criticized as antidemocratic, including blocking Russian social media platforms and establishing quotas for the usage of Ukrainian in print and on the radio and television

Ukrainians aren't exaggerating when they describe Russian language as a cudgel of Kremlin influence. Putin has claimed that his aggressive foreign policy in places such as the Baltic states, Georgia, Moldova and Ukraine has been in defense of Russian speakers and their rights. The Russian government funds a Russian cultural and language organization, called "Russki Mir" or "Russian World," which acts as an arm of Russian influence and soft power around the world. Russianlanguage media outlets posing as local media have peddled disinformation and targeted Russian-speaking populations across the former communist space.

Despite this background, embassies, media outlets and airports worldwide have been slow to correct their style guides and flight monitors. The capital's official transliteration has been Kyiv since 1995, but mentions of "Kiev" are still common.

The very fact that so many Americans were puzzled by the official pronunciation of Kyiv shows how effective the Kremlin has been in promoting its worldview.

has been in promoting its worldview.

Though Ukrainians may not expect Americans to master the guttural first syllable, they are rightfully offended when they see a spelling of their capital that has been defunct for nearly 25 years bandied about in print and on the international stage. And as inaccuracies abound, their country is once again thrust into the limelight, perceived as a football, or worse — a casualty in a battle between great powers. But Ukrainians have agency. The least we can do is refer to their capital by its official name.

Since the quid pro quo drama began, at least, both The Washington Post and The New York Times finally announced they would use the Ukrainian spelling. For Kyiv, perhaps there is a silver lining, however thin, in the impeachment cloud.

Why we aren't saving enough for retirement

U.S. stock indexes continue to hit new all-time high levels, though not with the usual hoopla.

Perhaps politics is overshadowing market performance, but there is also evidence that almost half the country has little reason to care. Just 52% of Americans own stocks or stock mutual funds either inside or outside of a retirement account. And that half doesn't tell the whole story.

A research 2017 paper by New York University professor Edward N. Wolff found that "despite the fact that almost half of all households owned stock shares either directly or indirectly through mutual funds, trusts, or various pension accounts, the richest 10% of households controlled 84% of the total value of these stocks in 2016."

I thought about these stats after the IRS announced its annual inflation adjustments to retirement plan contributions for tax year 2020. If you participate in a 401(k), 403(b), most 457 plans and the federal government's Thrift Savings Plan, you will be able to contribute a maximum of $19,500 next year, up $500 from 2019.

The catch-up contribution for employees ages 50 and over in these plans will increase from $6,000 to $6,500. (Note: The limit on annual contributions to traditional and Roth IRAs is unchanged at $6,000, as is the catch-up contribution for those over 50, which stays at $1,000.)

For many Americans, these limits are irrelevant because they are not even close to maximizing their contributions. It's not due to some moral flaw.

According to a recent paper from the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College, for workers to accumulate substantial retirement savings, they must contrib-ute regularly to their plans, keep their money in the accounts and they also need to maximize after-fee returns.

That's a tall order, according to the authors, who say the reason that most workers have 401(k)/IRA balances at retirement that are "substantially below their potential" is due to aspects of the U.S. reti system that make it difficult to achieve

The two biggest factors that contribute to the low level of retirement savings are "the immaturity of the system" and "the lack of universal coverage." The paper notes that the shift from employer-funded pensions to employee funded retirement accounts occurred in the 1980s, which means "many of today's 60-year-olds did not participate in a 401(k) plan when they were young work-

Additionally, many workers today still do not participate in plans, either because the employer does not offer one or because they are not eligible to participate.

Of those who do participate, some retirement balances shrink over time due to "leakages," which include the ability to cash out when changing jobs, in-service withdrawals (hardship and tax-free withdrawals beginning at age 59 1/2), and loans; and those dastardly fees.

The low level of savings, combined with increasing life expectancies, explains why many older Americans are staying in their

According to AARP, "Americans 55 and older make up slightly less than a quarter of the nation's labor force, but they filled almost half (49%) of the 2.9 million jobs gained in 2018 - the biggest share of any Chance the Rapper performs at the United Center in Chicago in late September.

Chance on change

The rapper talks about nonprofits, politics and his new journalism venture

By MARK WILSON | Fast Company

esterday, I left my wallet at home," says Chancelor Bennett, aka Chance the Rapper. It's 9 p.m. on a fall evening at a Chicago recording studio, and he and his bandmates are packing up for the night. Four days from now, they will put on their biggest show of the year, at the United Center.

Bennett admits to feeling a little overwhelmed by having a new baby at home and a new tour to prepare for, and yesterday was proof. He had taken his 4-yearold daughter, Kensli, to Dunkin' for a rare treat before school. It was the first day all week that he had been able to do morning drop-off, and he'd wanted it to feel special. She picked out a sprinkle-topped chocolate doughnut, and he realized his pocket was empty.

"It's just a crazy letdown for a child," he says, shaking his head, clearly still unable to forgive himself. Luckily, another customer was more than happy to pick up the tab — in exchange for a photo with Chance the Rapper

All of 2019, in fact, has been rather frenzied for the 26-year-old, who made the unthinkable choice several years ago to eschew record deals and give his music away for free. He's garnered more than 1.5 billion streams on SoundCloud since 2012, and he's earned millions of dollars in revenue, through live shows, merchandise and endorsements. Last winter, he filmed six episodes of "Rhythm and Flow," a Netflix talent competition that he hosts alongside Cardi B, T.I., and a slew of R&B royalty, which debuted in October.

In March, he celebrated his wedding to longtime girlfriend Kirsten Corley, a childhood behavioral therapist and Kensli's mother. In July, he released "The Big Day," his first official full "album" (previously, he had released three "mixtapes" — the last of which nabbed three Grammys), which became a Billboard No. 2 hit. He made his feature-film debut in July with a cameo in "The Lion King" remake. In October, he hosted "Saturday Night Live" for the second time, also serving as musical guest.

During all of this, he was also helping to run SocialWorks, the nonprofit he founded in 2016 that works to improve the lives of youth in Chicago through arts education, mental health services, clothing drives and more. Bennett has donated $2 million to SocialWorks' efforts, including $1 million to Chicago Public Schools and $1 million to Chicago mental health initiatives.

In late August, Corley gave birth to the couple's second daughter, Marli. It was this development that caused Bennett's already packed schedule to melt down — he felt he couldn't be a new father and go on tour at the same time. Eleven days after Marli was born, he announced, via Instagram (and a photo of himself with his girls), that he'd be postponing his heavily anticipated, 31stop North American tour until January.

Yet he kept his promise to Chicago. On Sept. 28, he performed for a crowd of tens of thousands, which featured his brother, Taylor, and Kanye West. The decibel level in the United Center, home of the Chicago Bulls, reached levels that rivaled the Michael Jordan era. Chicago was simply another loved one whom Bennett couldn't disappoint. As he says himself on his 2018 track "I Might Need Security": "I'm a sign to my city like the Bennett says that the urge to give back to the community didn't come upon him suddenly; he had always felt a certain 'weight" of responsibility. "It's just how I was raised and my faith. It's the exact opposite of impostor syndrome. It's like, I walk outside sometimes and I feel like I have an abundance, and so I feel like I need to share it and serve in all the ways that I can find," he says. "It just feels like that's who I am — and not in a way that's cocky (but just that) I'm supposed to share things."

In addition to Bennett's $2 million, SocialWorks has been funded by $6 million from corporations that include Google, Lyft, and Champion (none of which sponsor Bennett directly), and the organization forges other kinds of affiliations when appropriate. Bennett is highly disciplined with his music — he makes decisive edits to the tracks during rehearsals to get them just right — but with SocialWorks, he's accommodating.

"I really like to help people, and I really like to feel happy," he says with a slight smile. "So, in a certain context I'm the best at saying no, but in other cases, yeah, I'm not the 'no' guy."

There's more to come. For years, Bennett has teased the idea of running for office (in a 2015 track, he said: "They screaming Chano for mayor / I'm thinking maybe I should"), and after his donation to Chicago Public Schools in 2017, his fans started a petition for him to run.

"I don't know," he says. Running for office is one thing, but when it comes to actual governing, "the decisions are always either reformist at the most, or maybe conservative, but they're never radical. And I feel like if I was in that position, I'd just lose my mind understanding how many things are wrong and being a part of that." Not only does he agree with the sentiment that governing is like trying to turn a very big ship, but "the ship itself is flawed," he says.

If Bennett's future isn't in politics, it could be in news. In the track "I Might Need Security," released before his latest album, Bennett revealed that he had purchased the 15-year-old city blog The Chicagoist for an undisclosed amount in

To many, this was a shock. Not just that he'd purchased a news site, but that he was claiming he'd control its voice. "A lot of people . . . thought that I was saying, 'I'm a tyrant.' "That's not the case, he promises. The Chicagoist will relaunch as an app he's helping to design. It will be a utility, he says, focused less on crime reports or news from City Hall and more on food and culture.

"Just creating a city-level directory for everything, and making it more interactive, is my main goal," he says. Once the platform is built, Bennett plans to bow out, giving an editor complete independence. But Bennett bristles at the way people reacted, pointing out how common it is for successful black entertainers to receive criticism when they try to change lanes (witness Jay-Z's purchase of the Brooklyn Nets or just about every business Oprah Winfrey has pursued).

Indeed, publishing may seem like a surprising turn for Chance the Rapper, but he's beginning to look at his career in the longer term and embrace the amorphous archetype of his own future.

"I made a lot of decisions around the ages of 17 and 18 that impacted me for the rest of my life." He hit his milestones early. "I wanted to be on 'SNL,' I wanted to go to the MTV Video Music Awards. I wanted to meet Kanye West," he says. "But then it's like, life goes on, and you have to form new goals."

Taking contrarian approach

4 funds on different path

By Nellie S. Huang

Warren Buffett best described how to be a contrarian investor: "Be fearful when others are greedy, and greedy when others are fearful." In other words, move counter

Investors like Buffett are proof that a contrarian approach can reap big rewards. But in recent years, most contrarians have underperformed as a small group of popular, fast-growing tech companies have fueled stock market gains.

That said, a smart investor would do well to give stock funds with a contrarian approach a closer look.

Contrarians buy what others shun. Because out-of-favor assets tend to be cheap, the strategy of contrarian investing is similar to value investing, which focuses on assets that are underpriced based on certain measures. But not all contrarian stocks are value stocks. A fast-growing tech firm can be a contrarian choice at times.

Here are four funds that take a contrari-

Dodge & Cox Stock (symbol DODGX)

This boasts the lowest annual expense ratio of our contrarian picks: 0.52%. The managers at this large-company U.S. stock fund invest with a three-to-five-year holding period in mind and will wait even longer for troubled firms to turn around.

The fund's strategy tends to result in streaky returns. With a 1.6% loss for the past 12 months, it trails 72% of its peers. But investors who stick with the fund have been richly rewarded. Over the past 10 years, Stock outpaced the S&P 500 and ranked among the top 20% of its peers.

Heartland Value Plus (HRVIX)

Managers Bradford Evans and Andrew Fleming look for unloved and undervalued small-cap stocks with strong balance sheets. Dividends are a plus, too. On top of that, Evans and Fleming want to see a solid plan to improve revenues and earnings The portfolio holds 43 stocks, with an average market value of $1.7 billion. The fund currently yields 0.59%.

The fund has had an 11.0% annualized return since 2016. The expense ratio is

Janus Henderson Contrarian (JSVAX)

Since manager Nick Schommer took over in mid-2017, the fund has returned 12.2% annualized, which narrowly beats its benchmark. Expenses are a low 0.74%

Schommer has overhauled the portfolio, winding up with 39 stocks that fit into one of three categories: what he calls misunderstood businesses; undervalued companies whose parts are separately worth more than the whole; and firms whose earnings and revenue growth rates are underappreciated.

Meridian Contrarian (MFCAX)

You've got to take the good with the bad with this fund. The A shares of Meridian Contrarian charge a 5.75% load, but you can buy shares for no fee through Schwab. The high, 1.60% annual expense ratio is a turnoff, but in the past, the fund's performance has made up for it. Over the past five years, it returned 8.1% annualized. That beats its benchmark and 86% of its peers.

Manager James England favors small and midsize companies, but he can invest in firms of any size. England's ideal stock trades at a discount, but the business must also have a problem that can be fixed and a good strategy to fix it.

BEWARE OF BIASES

Investment portfolio can suffer because of them

ELLIOT RAPHAELSON The Savings Game

Many investors have biases when they structure or make changes to their port-

Omar Aguilar, chief investment officer of equities and multi-asset strategies at Charles Schwab, addressed some of these biases at Schwab Impact 2019, a gathering of finance industry experts. They included the following:

Recency bias: This is the tendency to invest based on the most recent favorable performance. This can be dangerous. For example, many investors have been burned badly by investing in crypto assets, incurring losses after the market peaked. What happens in the short run does not necessarily reflect long-term trends, and it may not be consistent with long-term portfolio objectives.

Loss aversion bias: This is the tendency to avoid short-term losses anticipating a fall in equity prices. It is impossible to predict tops and bottoms in the stock market. It is prudent to rebalance your portfolio at least annually, in order to protect stock market gains, but many investors sell their equity holdings too quickly and reinvest in low-yielding investments such as CDs or money market instruments. They hesitate to reinvest in equities out of fear that it is the wrong time.

Many readers have told me they left the market too soon, and they hesitate to come back. Investors who establish a stable stock to bond ratio that is consistent with long-term objectives, and who periodically rebalance to maintain it, will have better results than those who try to guess market tops and bottoms.

Confirmation bias: This is the tendency to seek information that reinforces beliefs rather than to look for objective information that might contradict their bias. For example, some investors prefer to invest only in a specific sector, such as energy or precious metals, and avoid diversification. Concentration in a specific sector rarely is best for long-term performance.

Most investors who develop and maintain a diversified portfolio with low costs, using index funds and exchange-traded funds (ETFs), will have more consistent results. Unless you have true expertise in a specific market segment, look for viewpoints and associated investments that may contradict preconceived notions regarding a narrow investment focus.

Home bias: This is the tendency to invest only in a market segment you understand. Investors need to consider sectors in which they don't have expertise. For example, in recent decades some of the most successful investments have been in technology and new health-care products. I don't have expertise in health care, but I have had excellent results in investing in mutual funds that contain significant holdings in that sector.

If you had avoided these sectors because you didn't know much about them — and most investors don't — you would have missed out on significant upside. You don't need expertise in every market segment to be a successful investor. The best way to do it is to invest in diversified mutual funds and ETFs that contain growth companies in a broad variety of sectors.

Many of my readers have been very successful, especially over the last 10 years, by controlling their biases and investing a significant percentage of their retirement funds in diversified index common stock mutual funds and FTFs

There is no guarantee that the next 10 years will be as good as the last 10. It is likely that there will be years in which the stock market will have negative results. However, no one can tell you with certainty when or if that will happen. However, the most successful investors will be those who recognize their biases and take steps to keep them under control.

My advice is pretty straightforward: Establish a long-term plan in which you are comfortable. Decide what percentage of your retirement funds you want in stocks, bonds and cash equivalents such as CDs and money market instruments. Re-balance at least once a year.

Your common stock portfolio should be diversified, whether it is in mutual funds or ETFs. Select a financial firm whose management costs are low. You don't have to pay a financial adviser 1% or more to manage your portfolio; you don't have to pay a front-end commission, and you can find index funds and ETFs with low annual fees. Many of these have annual fees less than 0.1%.

Gifts that will have lasting value to kids

It's time for my annual suggestions for holiday gifts for your children and grand-children. You might prefer to give them the latest gadget or toy, but where will those presents be a year from now? If instead, you make at least part of your gift a teaching opportunity about money, your gift will last a lifetime — or perhaps until college is fully paid.

The gift of a college education

Let's start with the gift contribution to a 529 college savings account. Money in these accounts grows tax-free for college expenses, at any school in any state. And it can be used by any child in the family.

You can use your own state plan, a good idea if you get a state income tax deduction. For example, consider Illinois' Bright Start Savings Plan (BrightStartSavings.com), which Morningstar recently named as one of the top five 529s in the country. Illinois residents can deduct up to $10,000 in contributions per individual, or $20,000 for married couples filing jointly, from their state income taxes.

But you don't have to be a state resident to take advantage of Bright Start or any of the best-run plans in the country. Search them out at SavingforCollege.com, where plans are rated on performance and costs. You can apply directly using their links.

It's easy to open a 529 College Savings Account, and you don't need to pay a broker to do it. A parent or grandparent can be custodian of the account.

The gift of shares of stock

There's no better way to teach investing than by purchasing a few shares of stock in a company that they child recognizes — whether it's Nike, Apple or McDonald's. And it's easy to buy those shares at Stockpile.com, which has a gift card program that allows you to purchase fractional shares in more than 1,000 stocks and ETFs with a $5 minimum investment. Each trade costs 99 cents, and you don't get to set price limits on your purchase.

The child can follow the price movements in his or her own account online. You can make your gift by email, by printing out a gift card, or — if you act quickly — by having Stockpile mail you (or the recipient) a plastic gift card allowing the recipient to choose a stock. The giver doesn't have to open an account to send the gift card, but a parent or custodian must be involved to redeem the gift by purchasing stock.

The gift of starting early

My all-time favorite money gift for children old enough to count and know their coins is the piggy bank created by Susan Beacham of Money Savvy Generation. This four-chambered translucent plastic piggy bank has sections labeled: Save, Spend, Donate and Invest. The piggy bank costs $19.99, and for an additional $2.99 you get a coloring book/workbook with money activities.

Apps that teach money

Finally, because they're buried in technology all the time, consider these two free apps. The Bank of Mom app teaches money management through lines of credit on their allowance or pay them for chores. And the Kids Money app is a wonderful lesson in planning and saving for a big purchase like a bike or a new cellphone.

You'll be glad you gave a gift of knowledge that will serve children for a lifetime. That's the Savage Truth.

Missed deadline for taking RMD

Moves to make to avoid big penalty

KIPLINGER'S MONEY POWER

Q. I was reviewing the tax return that my father filed this year and just realized that he missed taking his required minimum distribution last year. He turned 70½ toward the end of 2018. What do we do now? I hear the penalty is high.

A. The penalty for missing a required minimum distribution is hefty, but there is some relief available. When a taxpayer turns 70½, he or she has until April 1 of the following year to take the first RMD. For your father, that means his first RMD should have been taken by April 1, 2019. So he didn't need to report an RMD on his 2018 tax return, but he did miss the deadline for taking his first RMD.

Now that you know, have your father take out his first RMD immediately. He can then file IRS Form 5329 to ask for a waiver of the penalty, which is 50% of the missed RMD amount. Attach a letter to the form explaining the mistake and the action taken to fix it. Such RMD penalty waiver requests are often granted by the IRS, particularly for first timers who miss an RMD.

More good news: Your father still has time to take his second RMD. While the first RMD has a delayed deadline of April 1, the second and all subsequent RMDs must be taken by Dec. 31. To avoid missing RMDs in the future, your father may want to set up automatic distributions with the retirement account custodian.

Q. As a retiree, how do you plan for getting credit, such as for a car loan, without a salary? I have an excellent credit record, and I will have a pension and distributions from an IRA and a 401(k) in retirement.

A. No need to worry. Pensions, Social Security and withdrawals from retirement plans all count as income, says Greg McBride, chief financial analyst for Bankrate.com. "If you're bringing in, for example, $50,000 per year in income from pensions, Social Security, investments and retirement plan withdrawals, that counts just the same as paystubs or a W-2 for a $50,000 per year job," McBride says.

If you're a bit light on income because of retirement, he says lenders may also take into account other compensating factors, such as a strong credit rating and your total assets.

Allow room for innovation without losing efficiency

When it comes to innovation, companies and people face a challenge. Creativity requires space to explore, experiment and ponder. Great insights can't be scheduled. They arise instead in non-linear ways, such as ambling walks in the park and days filled

So how can you have the best of both worlds? How can you promote innovation and protect productive efficiency? In the early days, innovative companies like 3M and Google came up with an elegant solution: encourage employees to take Innovation Time Off to generate new ideas.

At 3M, they called it the "15 percent time" policy, a policy that is said to have led to the creation of Post-it Notes. At Google, they called it the "20 percent time" policy, a policy that is said to have resulted in the birth of Gmail.

Despite the brilliance of these early solutions, few companies have adopted them. And, at Google, fewer employees now take advantage of the 20 percent policy, not because of some topdown change but because it often doesn't make sense for the advancement of their career to do

It's a change that goes back to the paradox of innovation. As one Google employee told me, "As we get bigger and our customers get louder, we have to listen to them. We have to ask: how do we balance innovation with getting critical customer requested features done or satisfying the demands of our large enterprise customers?"

Urgent business demands will almost always take priority over carving out white space for innovation. So how can businesses and individuals create time for innovation while staying aligned with core business objectives? Here are three strategies.

1. When you do make time for innovation, clear away all distractions

Consider Intel. Their engineers complained about not having enough time and space to think and be creative. So they piloted a policy called "thinking time." Each Tuesday morning, employees were encouraged to take their work offline. They cancelled meetings, forwarded calls to voicemail and put up an away message on email. Some even put up a "do not disturb" sign on their

This might sound radical. But the Intel policy arose from a powerful insight. Carving out space for innovation only works if we also carve out space from distraction, from email, social media, texts and the thousands of other digital alerts and notifications calling for our attention. Without space from distraction, "thinking time" quickly devolves into "mindless distraction time," which offers about as much business value as binge watching shows on Netflix.

2. Connect innovation time off to core business objectives

tion-based company adopted similar policies? The short answer: It's often unclear how innovation time off translates into meeting core business objectives.

The way to overcome this challenge is to inject a bit more linear, process-oriented business thinking into the case for innovation time off.

Against the backdrop of the modern business world, it's too much of a stretch to say, "I'm going to spend 20% of my time waiting for the next big idea to strike." It's much less of a stretch to say, "I'm going to spend one day a week for the next month thinking through an alternative approach that could increase efficiency and save us millions of dollars over the long run."

3. Start small with time-efficient ITO strategies

PixelSpoke, a web design and digital marketing firm, wanted to give its employees time for innovation and creative thinking, and yet as a small firm, they couldn't afford to offer employees anything like the 20 percent solution

So they started small by adopting a practice from the Entrepreneurial Operating System called the "clarity break." It's a time when employees have the opportunity to, in PixelSpoke CEO Cameron Madill's words, "go outside with nothing but a pad of paper and spend an hour thinking creatively."

The great thing about practices like the clarity break is that they minimize the disruptive impact of innovation time off. And yet they still carve out a space for undistracted, uninterrupted creative thinking.

The theme running throughout all of these strategies is this: for innovation time off to work. it's essential to balance the non-linear, divergent nature of innovation with the linear demands of running a business. Too much open space for innovation can lead to a decline in productivity and a failure to meet customer needs. Too much emphasis on meeting stated business objectives can lead to a stale creative culture, where the obsession with execution pushes aside innova-

Each business and indeed each individual has their own perfect point of balance between productivity and innovation — a point that can only be discovered through trial and error. Once you find it, either as a business or as an individual, you have a rare competitive advantage: the unique ability to mix innovation with focused productivity.

Noted printmaker taught at Northern Illinois University

By Graydon Megan

David Driesbach was a master printmaker whose work from original copper plate etchings and engravings often combined realistic, if whimsical, figures and surreal elements that left viewers free to conjure their own narrative.

Driesbach, who produced thousands of pieces of art over his long career, also taught printmaking for more than 25 years at Northern Illinois University in DeKalb. Peter Olson, who came to NIU as a graduate student in the early 1990s specifically to study with Driesbach, said his teacher's art connected with both students and the general public.

"You saw an image that drew you into an almost dreamlike world where you could bring your own meaning," said Olson, now assistant director of the NIU Art Museum.

For the opening of a show of work by Driesbach and two other artists in early 2000 in the Norris Gallery in St. Charles, the Tribune described Driesbach's work as quirky, with frequent use of motifs such as top hats, Roman columns, eyeglasses and floating people.

"I think my work appeals to people who have a sense of humor," Driesbach told the newspaper. "The prints often have stories behind them, and I think that people like that too."

Driesbach, 97, died Nov. 17 in Wynscape Rehabilitation Center in Wheaton of complications from a recent fall, according to his daughter, Carrie Provost. He was a longtime resident of the DeKalb area before moving to Wheaton in 2005.

Olson explained that while the term "print" can have many meanings in art, in a process known as intaglio, Driesbach always produced his prints by etching or engraving an original image on a copper plate usually one-eighth of an inch thick — and then applying ink and color to the plate before laying art paper over the plate and putting it though a hand-cranked press to transfer the image to the paper.

In 2000, Driesbach's prints were in the collections of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Seattle Art Museum and some 200 other institutions, according to the Tribune article.

FAMILY PHOTO

David Driesbach began teaching at Northern Illinois University in 1964.

His one-man shows included an exhibit at the Art Institute of Chicago. Olson said his museum has several hundred Driesbach prints. While not on display currently, they are available for study.

Driesbach was born in 1922 in Wausau, Wisconsin, and soon moved with his family to Rockford. He showed artistic talent early, his daughter said, and often accompanied his mother, also a talented artist, to meetings of art groups, where he practiced his drawing.

After graduating from Rockford High School in 1940, he began studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He enlisted in the Marine Corps and served in the Pacific from 1942 to 1945. His daughter said with his artistic ability and a keen sense of direction, he became a scout, pinpointing enemy locations on maps he drew for troop commanders.

He returned to the States on Thanksgiving Day 1945, and after further study elsewhere enrolled at the University of Iowa in Iowa City to pursue a master's degree in fine art. In late 1946, he married Doris "Maggie" Magnuson, whom he had met in junior high. The couple lived in barracks on the Iowa campus from 1948 until he completed his degree in 1951.

His education at Iowa included studying under famed printmaker Mauricio Lasansky. Years later, while on sabbatical in 1969, he was able to study in Paris with another leading printmaker, Stanley William Hayter.

After posts as an art professor at schools in Arkansas, Illinois and Ohio, Driesbach came to NIU in 1964 and continued to teach there until retiring in 1991.

Driesbach continued making art until the end of his life, while commenting on his work and his process on his website.

"I've always had a yen for humor," he said on his site, "and often I think of my prints in terms of theatre a stage setting, the main characters, the music accompanying the action."

In addition to teaching drawing and printmaking, Driesbach taught courses in art history. He credited trips to Europe and what he called "innumerable visits to museums and Exhibitions" with molding his career.

He also talked about the fun of approaching a blank sheet of copper with only the vaguest idea to then see another adventure happen.

In later years, his daughter said, he traveled the country giving workshops at colleges on color viscosity printmaking, a technique he learned while on sabbatical in Paris. He received the Printmaker Emeritus Award from the Southern Graphic Council International in 2012.

Driesbach also is survived by his other daughters Julie Nelson, Elizabeth Eisen and Emily Wolffing; his son, John; a sister, Joy Peterson; a stepsister, Annette Holmes; 12 grandchildren; and 17 great-grandchildren.

His wife, Maggie, died in January of this year.

A celebration of his life is planned for December.

Notice of a Data Incident

Illinois Gastroenterology Group, LLC ("IGG") recently became aware that an unauthorized third party obtained access to two IGG employees' email accounts from May 20, 2019 through May 28, 2019

Upon learning of the incident, IGG reset the credentials of the compromised email accounts to prevent further access. IGG promptly launched a comprehensive investigation and retained a leading forensic security firm to help determine the scope of the incident and those impacted. Additionally, IGG is taking measures to help prevent this type of incident from occurring in the future, including but not limited to, implementing advanced technology solutions and providing all employees further training and reminders about email and information technology security.

On or about September 26, 2019, IGG determined that the two impacted employee email accounts contained some patients' and employees' personal information, including name and, in some instances, Social Security numbers and certain limited health information.

Beginning November 25, 2019, IGG sent written notification to all potentially impacted individuals for whom it has contact information. For the few patients and employees with Social Security numbers impacted, IGG has provided a complimentary membership for credit monitoring and identity protection services.

Affected individuals should refer to the notice they receive in the mail regarding the steps they can take to protect themselves. Affected patients and employees may obtain additional information by calling a confidential inquiry line at 1-833-947-1418 between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m., CST, Monday through Friday.

As a general precautionary measure, individuals should remain vigilant about protecting themselves against potential fraud or identity theft by, among other things, reviewing their account statements and monitoring credit reports closely. If individuals detect any suspicious activity on an account, they should promptly notify the financial institution of company with which the account is maintained. They should also promptly report any fraudulent activity or any suspected incidents of identity theft to the proper law enforcement authorities, including the police and their state's attorney general

IGG apologizes for any inconvenience or concern that this incident might cause. IGG remains committed to providing patients with the highest quality of care

Ugly as usual, but this time Bears overcome slow start to hold off lowly Giants

Season in a snippet: Bears stumble into missed 48-yard PAT

The Bears' 3-yard touchdown drive and ensuing effort for an extra point in the third quarter of Sunday's 19-14 win over the Giants may wind up encapsulating their disappointing season.

Khalil Mack set the table for an easy score when he raced past Giants left tackle Nate Solder on a rare one-on-one opportunity and stripped rookie Daniel Jones from behind, the NFL-leading 10th lost fumble of the season for the rookie quarterback. The ball squirted back to the Giants 7-yard line, where Nick Williams grabbed it and returned it to the 3.

Two David Montgomery runs netted 1 yard — nothing new in a season in which the Bears are struggling mightily to run the ball. Then coach Matt Nagy called a quarterback sweep for Mitch Trubisky, who couldn't finish last Sunday's game in Los Angeles because of a hip pointer.

Trubisky easily plowed into the end zone for his first rushing

'Not good enough': Not even Bears all that thrilled by win

Mitch Trubisky reflexively chuckled at the question. In this withered Bears season, there's still a place for gallows humor.

Not that it was silly for a reporter to ask the quarterback what positives he'd like to take from the 19-14 victory over the Giants on Sunday at Soldier Field. It's just that the list was shorter, simpler and lamer than a win should yield.

"We scored more points than them," Trubisky deadpanned.

That was all. And even that statement, like almost every sporadic uptick this season, was offset by a big, fat "but."

"But it's not good enough,"
Trubisky said. "We've got to be better in the red zone. We've got to be better on third down. We've got to be better as an offense ... and quit making mistakes."

That's the aftertaste of the

Bears, Giants, Fox all sloppy

It's worth remembering it's not always the announcers' fault when things go awry on an NFL telecast.

Sometimes, as in Fox's coverage of the Bears' uninspiring 19-14 victory over the Giants, it's a team effort. Never forget the behind-the-scenes people and the role they Take the penalty that negated Mitch Trubisky's 60-yard pass play with Allen Robinson in the second quarter.

Even before it was officially announced the penalty was against the Bears, Fox's camera zeroed in on No. 72, Charles Leno

It's a logical guess. When there has been a penalty on the Bears offensive line, Leno's been a solid suspect this season.

But the focus remained on Leno even after referee Shawn Hochuli said the penalty for hands on the face mask was on No. 65, Cody Whitehair. That should have been the end of singling out Leno.

Fox analyst Chris Spielman tried — and failed — to explain what Leno did, circling the left tackle with his telestrator pen as he analyzed a penalty that didn't happen.

"I didn't see the hands to the face. I really did not see it," Spielman said, before equivocating a bit. "But when things are going bad, it tends to go where the calls are getting bad.

"Now I think he punched a little high (on Giants outside linebacker Lorenzo Carter). I don't think he hit them in the face. It looked like he hit him in the face, but I don't think he hit him in the face."

It did not at all look like Leno hit Carter in the face, if we're being honest, and Spielman could not have been clearer in stating he didn't see the penalty that was called.

All of this suggests it was a Fox spotter playing pin the flag on Leno.

What likely happened is the Fox crew people who talk in Spielman's headset in a bid to make him seem more omniscient than he is talked to him over Hochuli's identification of Whitehair as the culprit as they set up the replay.

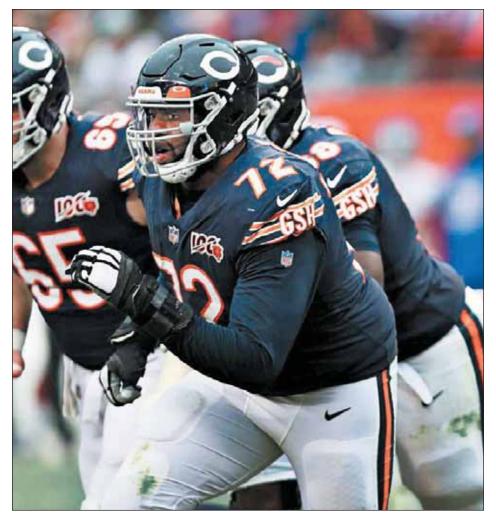

Refs do occasionally ID the wrong player. But Spielman and play-by-play announcer Thom Brennaman never suggested that was even a possibility in this

Although mistakes happen in coverage of a live event, what's surprising is that it took so long for the broadcasters to come clean about a mistake for the second Bears telecast in a row.

In Week 11, it was NBCs Al Michaels and Cris Collinsworth who didn't acknowledge until several minutes after the game that the Bears said Trubisky left their loss to the Rams because of a hip injury.

This time a play, a punt, a commercial break — almost five minutes in all — lapsed before Spielman circled back to explain the penalty that put the kibosh a big Bears play was in fact called on Whitehair.

Spielman didn't think that was a great call either, noting that Giants linebacker Markus Golden had his hands in Whitehair's face. But rather than criticize the call, he reprised his earlier bromide about bad officiating just being one of those things that happen with struggling teams — as if both the Bears and Giants weren't struggling.

"When things are going your way, they're going to call it on the opposite team as opposed to your team," Spielman said. "So they could have called that either way or offsetting."

Blame him for the trite attempt to shrug off the bad call, but not Fox's botched prosecution of Leno.

Winner: Pumpkin Pie Guy

Thanks to a tweet by @ErnestWilkins, we know some fan wearing a Khalil Mack jersey in the corner of an end zone managed to smuggle a whole pumpkin pie and can of whipped cream into Soldier Field.

Some hailed Pumpkin Pie Guy as a hero without reservations.

A few of us wondered how Peter Peter Pumpkin Eater got both the dessert and topping past gate security personnel and scanners.

This is, after all, a stadium where concessionaires won't even let a fan keep the caps from the overpriced soft drinks they purchase for fear the full plastic bottles could become weapons if thrown.

I guess we should give thanks it was only whipped cream and not something more dangerous — and less delicious — in the can and that a pie fight didn't break out in the stands, though it would have complemented the clown show on the field.

Loser: Fox playoff chances graphic

Did you notice neither Brennaman nor Spielman bothered to address the Bears' chances when the graphic was on screen? Can you say "ultra-long shot?"

Yes, it's a mathematical possibility the Bears (4-6 when the graphic ran late in the first half and now 5-6 with five games to play remain) are "in the hunt," as it indicated.

But at least four of the five teams now ahead of them in the NFC wild-card chase would have to fall apart while the Bears won all their remaining games in order to make a playoff berth happen at this point.

Winner: Fox quarterback graphic

Bears quarterbacking stats are always good for an eye-opening graphic, such as the one Sunday that showed how many quarterbacks had logged starts for the Bears and Giants in the last 15 years.

The Giants had three — Eli Manning, Geno Smith and Daniel Jones — while the Bears had (gulp) 17.

It's one of those things Bears fans know, but seeing it laid out is always good for a jolt. It's not always a good jolt, but it's a jolt nonetheless.

Loser: George Halas

I'm not sure why it never before occurred to me how stupid it was to name a football team after an animal that goes to sleep when the weather gets cold.

With the offense struggling and the big hole at tight end, why don't the Bears move Cordarrelle Patterson to tight end? He is the same size as Trey Burton but has way more speed and I imagine a higher vertical leap. Why not try? — Ron R.

Readers have suggested this all season, and it's simply not realistic. Patterson is a matchup player, — or a gadget player. He never really has taken off as a wide receiver, the position the Vikings drafted him as in the first round in 2013. He has emerged as the best kickoff returner in the league and has helped significantly improve the Bears special teams. Patterson is not a skilled route runner. His career high for receptions in a season is 52 (for 453 yards) in 2016 with the Vikings. The Patriots, who arguably have the best coaching staff in the league, didn't throw the ball to him much and didn't try him at tight end when they had injury issues at the position last season. Size, speed and vertical ability don't necessarily make a player a candidate to play tight end.

score of the season and the Bears led the Giants 19-7, a nice rally after falling behind 7-0 in the second quarter. Nagy had sprinted nearly to the goal line to call timeout because he feared the Bears would be called for delay of game, but the ball was snapped just as the play clock hit zero, and Trubisky easily scored around the right

'Yeah, I wanted that play called down there," Trubisky said. "Especially when they were zoning us, showing us a favorable run box. David (Montgomery) made a great block, O-line did a great job getting out and when you get down there, you've just got to finish strong."

The touchdown staked the Bears to a two-score lead, one they were unlikely to relinquish against Jones with the defense doing a nice job of bottling up running back Saquon Barkley. But the Bears shouldn't have to struggle to beat the lousy Giants

(2-9), who lost their seventh straight game. As it was, the defense needed a fourthdown stop with 1:43 to play to secure the victory. The Giants had the ball and could have won with a late score because the Bears bungled the series after Trubisky's

First, Nagy called for a two-point conversion, a good decision to try to push the lead to 14. Everything that followed was a mess. First, the Bears were forced to burn a timeout when they were not aligned prop-

Next, a successful pass to Taylor Gabriel in the corner of the end zone was wiped out when Allen Robinson was called for offensive pass interference. He was guilty of picking Giants cornerback Janoris Jenkins, a mistake because there's no way Jenkins could have made the play. That call backed the Bears up for a 43yard extra point. But they weren't able to kick that because confusion led to defensive lineman Brent Urban sprinting onto the field to block after the Bears already had 11 men on the field. "I was told to go out there," Urban said.

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears quarterback Mitch Trubisky celebrates after scoring a touchdown in the third quarter of Sunday's win over the Giants in Chicago.

"And went out there and got a penalty." Right tackle Bobby Massie had been knocked out of the game with a right ankle injury and special teams coordinator Chris Tabor had replaced him. In confusion, some players worried the Bears were short-handed because Massie was out. So, in the heat of the moment Urban was told

"There's just a little miscommunication between players and coaches just because of the norm that they're used to see 70 out there, and he wasn't," Nagy said.

to run out there

Talk about a lot to unpack. There was the failure to be able to hand the ball to Montgomery and run it in, the ongoing communication issues plaguing the offense, the failed execution on the passinterference call, Urban's penalty for sideline confusion and the slumping kicker missing again.

It encapsulates the season to date, doesn't it? Defense continues to play well. Offense stumbles. Kicker misses. It's all right there.

Trubisky wound up passing for a season-high 278 yards, but he threw two interceptions, one in the end zone on a failed pass for Robinson and a second on a deep shot down the middle that was woefully underthrown. On the plus side, there were four completions of 20 or more yards. Those chunk plays have largely been missing all

But it's impossible to feel differently about the Bears, now 5-6. The Giants defense is atrocious, and nine of their 10 previous opponents scored 27 points or more. The broken Bears offense managed only 19 at home on a clear, crisp afternoon for football.

If Giants kicker Aldrick Rosas doesn't miss field-goal attempts in the first half from 42 and 43 yards, the second half might have unfolded differently. The Bears are familiar with that storyline. At least their guy hit his short kicks from 26 and 24 yards and missed only on an extra point from 48 yards.

That's something, winding up with a 48-yard attempt for an extra point. That's the 2019 Bears.

Bears outside linebacker Khalil Mack (52) closes in for a strip-sack of Giants quarterback Daniel Jones in the third quarter that helped turn Sunday's game in the Bears' favor.

Mack parties in Club Tub

WIEDERER On the Bears

Khalil Mack was the last player out of the Bears' locker room Sunday afternoon, a big-play standout not only relishing the day's 19-14 win over the Giants but also turning his attention forward. With a quick turnaround on the itinerary for this week's Thanksgiving date with the Lions, Mack kept himself submerged in cold water for a bit longer than usual.

He encouraged a handful of teammates to join him then outlasted them all.

"There was a cold tub party in there not too long ago," Mack said.

Club Dub, it turns out, had temporarily become Club Tub.

Either way, the vibes in the Bears locker room were more positive Sunday in large part because of the big play Mack delivered midway through the third quarter. As part of a surge during which the Bears scored 16 points in seven minutes, Mack made the biggest defensive contribution, overpowering Giants left tackle Nate Solder, then hacking the football out of quarterback Daniel Jones' right hand.

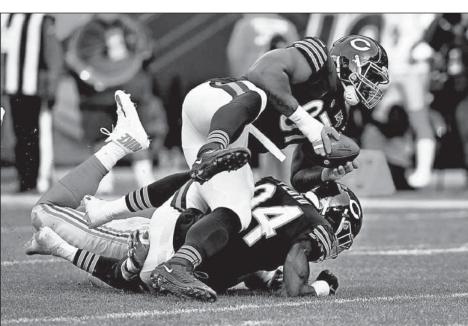

Fumble. Bears ball. At the Giants 3-yard

The best part of that play for Mack? The Giants were foolish enough to leave him singled up against Solder. And when the Bears outside linebacker was reminded of that, his eyes lit up.

You said it, man. Finally got singled up," Mack said. "And I knew that I had to make the most of the opportunity."

On that play, Mack also had to be quick enough to beat teammates Leonard Floyd and Nick Williams to Jones. All three Bears came flying into the backfield after the snap and arrived at the rookie quarterback so close to one another that they weren't initially sure who got home first.

Yeah," Mack said. "There was a discussion on what happened. ... We didn't know

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The Bears' Nick Williams recovers the ball after Daniel Jones' fumble in the third quarter.

who got it. I had a feeling."

Added Williams: "Man, I thought I could get there. Then I saw Mack flash across my face. I knew he was going to get the ball out. And then I just started looking for the ball on the ground."

Without the sack, Williams did the next best thing. He found the loose football, grabbed it, then tried to lunge toward the

"We really want to score on that play ourselves," Mack said. "And that's another discussion that was going on. Nick was a little mad because he felt like somebody tripped him. I'm not going to say who. But

It's OK, Khalil. Floyd confessed. "Oh, he already did?" Mack said. "OK, cool. I ain't no snitch then."

Added Williams: "I think Flo fell up under me. ... But that play was big. It just turned the momentum. We feed off that. That got our crowd back into it."

It also gave the Bears' struggling offense a needed gift, an ultra-short field that led to a 3-yard touchdown drive and a commanding 19-7 lead.

"That was huge," safety Eddie Jackson said. "That was something we were very good at last year, creating turnovers and capitalizing (on) them. We just have to continue to create more."

That lone takeaway was a needed bright spot on a day that otherwise confirmed everything Chicago already knew about the 2019 Bears. Once again, even against a feeble last-place opponent, the inconsistent offense took way too long to get started. The Bears needed seven possessions to score their first touchdown and became just the second Giants opponent all season to not score 20 points.

Then the defense also took way too long to close things out, giving up a 23-yard touchdown pass on fourth-and-18 with 4:10 to play, a score that kept a sloppy twowin team alive until its final possession.

Yep, this was a victory to value but not to prop up. The Bears were the better of two struggling teams who will spend January on winter vacation. And Sunday's blooper reel would be hard to watch if the Bears didn't have to immediately turn their attention to the Lions.

Tight end Ben Braunecker, for example, found himself wide open across the middle of the field in the first quarter but dropped a pass that looked to be a possible 29-yard touchdown.

Four plays later Mitch Trubisky threw the first of his two interceptions.

On the next possession, Cody Whitehair committed an illegal-hands-to-the-face penalty that erased a 60-yard completion to Allen Robinson. And in the ugliest of sequences after Mack's forced fumble and Trubisky's 2yard touchdown run, the Bears first had to waste a timeout before a two-point conversion attempt; then committed an offensivepass-interference penalty on a successful conversion; then chaotically rushed a 12th man onto the field for a point-after-touchdown kick for another penalty; then pulled a 48-yard PAT try wide left.

That kind of sloppiness has defined this disappointing season. And an argument can be made that, through 11 games, the Bears have played good football throughout an entire game just two or three times.

(Even that might be generous.) Still, on Sunday, the Bears defense was the best unit on the field for either team and did enough to spark the win. They stopped the Giants 11 times on 12 third downs. Running back Saquon Barkley, meanwhile, was held to 2 yards or fewer on nine of his 19 touches and finished with 59 rushing yards, 22 coming on one fourth-

That, defensive players noted, felt like a worthy accomplishment.

We had that chip on our shoulder that we had to come in and stop the run," Jackson said. "He rushed for 100 (yards) on us last year and that was in the back of our minds. ... The motto was stopping Saquon. We had to contain him and put the game in (Jones') hands."

Jones threw for only 150 yards, and his 14th fumble of the season, the one caused by Mack, provided a turning point and another reminder of how valuable Mack can be.

'He got a one-on-one," Jackson said. "They've been triple-teaming him, doubling, chipping, everything in the book. When you give him a one-on-one, you see what he's capable of doing. And we're going to put our money on Mack every time."

THREE KEYS

The Bears won Sunday. The final score was 19-14, and it improved their record to 5-6 heading into a Thanksgiving week trip to Detroit. But Sunday's triumph was far from a masterpiece, it was a sloppy effort that included two turnovers, six penalties and another missed kick. Still, the Bears aren't apologizing. Here's a look at our three keys for Sunday's game.

1. Take away any sense of hope the Giants have early on. For the sixth time in the past seven games, the Bears let their opponent score first. Their first-half offense was again inconsistent. There were three three-and-outs on six possessions before halftime plus a woeful Mitch Trubisky interception and a two-minute drill that stalled inside the Giants' 10 and left Matt Nagy's team with just three points at the intermission. The Bears were playing with fire with that slow start and inability to close it out once they had a two-score lead. But the 2-9 Giants are bad enough that the Bears got away with it.

2. Get Khalil Mack back on track.

Khalil Mack knew coming into the game that he could take advantage of Giants QB Daniel Jones' fumbling issues. Mack's first sack since Week 8 was a big one. In the middle of the third quarter he took advantage of a one-on-one matchup against left tackle Nate Solder, stripped the ball from Jones and got the Bears a critical takeaway. The offense turned that gift into a 19-7 lead. Said safety Eddie Jackson: "They've been triple-teaming him, doubling, chipping ... When you give him a one-on-one, you see what he's capable of doing." Mack finished with three tackles and two quarterback hits.

3. Take the passing game to a new level. The Bears' final tally Sunday: two completions of more than 30 yards, including a 32-yard touchdown pass to Allen Robinson. Robinson also had a 49-yard grab on a field-goal drive in the third quarter. And his 60-yard reception from Trubisky in the second quarter was negated by an illegal-hands-to-the-face penalty against center Cody Whitehair. Robinson had his biggest game of the season with six catches for 131 yards, and second-year receiver Anthony Miller chipped in with six grabs for a season-high 77 yards. The Bears passed for a season-best 270 yards.

Tom Brady calls out signals during the Patriots' win Sunday. He threw for 190 yards and a touchdown.

PATRIOTS 13, COWBOYS 9

Patriots stay hot at home

Defense dominates as they win 18th straight game in Foxborough

By Kyle Hightower Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. – Few teams have had success scoring touchdowns against the Patriots this season.

Add the NFL's top-ranked offense to that list.

The Patriots held the Cowboys ithout a TD for the first time this season, Tom Brady threw a touchdown pass and the Patriots secured a 13-9 victory Sunday.

It was the Patriots'18th straight regular-season victory at home. The Patriots (10-1) have won 10 games in 17 consecutive seasons dating back to 2003 and surpassed the 49ers (16 seasons from 1983-98) for the most consecutive years with at least 10 wins.

The Cowboys (6-5) had a chance to take the lead late. But facing fourth-and-11 on its own 25 with 1:50 left, Dak Prescott's 20-yard completion to Amari Cooper was nullified after an official review.

The Patriots, who struggled offensively in their win over the Eagles last week, played without two key receivers after Mohamed Sanu and Phillip Dorsett were ruled out with injuries. Brady made the most of what he had, tossing a first-quarter touchdown pass to rookie N'Keal Harry and completing a 32-yard pass to rookie Jakobi Meyers.

Brady completed 17 of 37 passes for 190 yards. Julian Edelman caught eight passes for 93 yards. Sony Michel rushed 20 times for 85 yards.

Brady has been critical of the offense's output in recent weeks. Coming away with wins is enough for him right now.

"I think every team develops at different times," Brady said. "I think we take the challenges as they come and try to do the best we can. I'm happy we came away with more points than them."

The Cowboys struggled to nove the hall Ezekiel Elliott rushed 21 times or 86 yards, but the Cowboys were just 2 of 13 on third down.

Prescott was 19 of 33 for 212 yards and a pick. Cooper was held without a catch for the first time as a member of the Cowboys.

■ Seahawks 17, Eagles 9: Rashaad Penny ran for a careerbest 129 yards, including a 58-yard score and Russell Wilson had a TD pass to help the Seahawks remain perfect in six road games. The Eagles were missing their top three WRs, leading rusher and two Pro Bowl offensive linemen. ■ Saints 34, Panthers 31: Wil Lutz kicked a 33-yard FG as time expired to help the host Saints emerge with the victory and take a four-game lead in the NFC South with five games left. Drew Brees threw for 311 yards and three TDs.

■ Jets 34, Raiders 3: Sam Darnold threw a pair of TD passes and ran for another score to give the host Jets their first three-game winning streak in over two years. Brian Poole returned an INT 15 yards for a TD and the rest of the Jets defense made things miserable for Derek Carr, who was pulled with just under two minutes left in the third quarter. The Raiders had won three straight.

■ Bills 20, Broncos 3: Josh Allen had two TD passes to make up for his first INT in 172 attempts and Shaq Lawson had two sacks as the Bills rolled at home to reach 8-3, which matches their best start since Hall of Fame QB Jim Kelly's final season in 1996. Bills RB Frank Gore had 65 yards rushing to up his total to 15,289 and move ahead of Barry Sanders into third on the NFL career list. ■ Browns 41, Dolphins 24:

Jarvis Landry caught two TD passes against his former team and the host Browns won their third straight game. Landry finished with 10 catches and 148 yards. Baker Mayfield had 327 yards passing and finished with three scoring strikes and Joe Schobert had a pair of INTs.

■ Steelers 16, Bengals 10: Devlin Hodges took over for struggling Mason Rudolph and threw a 79-yard TD pass in the third quarter, sparking Steelers to the road win. The Steelers defense recovered a pair of fumbles in the fourth. The Bengals (0-11) set franchise records for worst start and longest losing streak (12).

■ Bucs 35, Falcons 22: DL Vita Vea lined up at fullback and caught a pass for his first career TD and Jameis Winston finished with three scores through the air as the visiting Bucs climbed out of the NFC South cellar. Winston had a pair of INTs to increase his season total to a league-worst 20, but he posted his sixth straight 300vard passing game.

■ Bears 19, Giants 14: Khalil Mack set up a TD with a strip-sack and Allen Robinson had a season-high 131 yards receiving to lift the host Bears. Mitch Trubisky threw for a season-high 278 yards, one TD and two INTs in the victory. The Giants lost their seventh straight and clinched their third losing season in a row.

■ Redskins 19, Lions 16: Quinton Dunbar picked off Jeff Driskel in the final minute and Dustin Hopkins hit the goahead FG from 39 yards with 16 seconds left as the host Redskins snapped a four-game skid. Driskel threw three INTs for the Lions, who dropped their fourth game in a row.

■ Titans 42, Jaguars 20: Ryan Tannehill ran for two TDs and threw two TDs in the home win, improving to 4-1 as the Titans QB. It was the third victory in a row for the Titans. The Jags lost their third straight.

■ 49ers 37, Packers 8: Jimmy Garoppolo threw for 253 yards and a pair of long scores to lead the 49ers to the victory at home. The 49ers, who sacked Packers QB Aaron Rodgers five times, led 23-0 at halftime. TE Greg Kittle hauled in six passes for 129 yards and a TD in the win.

Bears wide receiver Allen Robinson gains big yards on a pass play in the third quarter of Sunday's victory over the Giants.

Breath of fresh air

WRs Robinson, Miller give much-needed spark to Bears' passing game

By Colleen Kane

Allen Robinson had Giants rookie cornerback Corey Ballentine where he wanted

Early in the third quarter of the Bears' 19-14 win over the Giants, the Bears wide receiver faked a move toward the left sideline and cut back inside. Ballentine whirled around to try to catch Robinson, but it was too late.

Robinson caught Mitch Trubisky's pass at the 7-yard line and stumbled the rest of the way into the end zone with Ballentine hanging on him for a 10-7 Bears lead.

The 32-yard touchdown was one of Robinson's six catches for a season-high 131 receiving yards, the sixth-best yardage total of his career. It is also his second-best as a Bear, trailing only the 133 yards he had on six catches against the Lions last season.

I tried to sell," Robinson said of the touchdown. "Fortunately for me out of the slot, I have a few different routes I can run, so I just tried to give him a certain look to something I had run earlier in the game. I knew I would have a little room to be able to make my move, and I would have some time to make my move, and everything played out pretty much how we thought it would.

Robinson has been the most reliable part of the Bears offense this year, but he was hard on himself last week after Rams cornerback Jalen Ramsey held him to four catches for 15 yards.

So his showing Sunday, coupled with wide receiver Anthony Miller's season-best performance of six catches for 77 yards, gave the Bears offense some refreshing moments in a season that has had few of

The duo played a major part in the first three of four straight Bears scoring drives from the end of the second quarter through the third. It was type of dual performance the Bears certainly thought they'd see more often this season.

"I thought we got a lot of looks we prepared for," Robinson said. "That being the case, we were ready for it. ... There wasn't any guessing. There wasn't any doubting. Everybody just played fast.

"We saw everything through the same set of eyes. We saw what we practiced."

It felt like a very-2019-Bears moment early in the second quarter when Trubisky hit Robinson with a 60-yard pass, only to have it called back because of center Cody Whitehair's illegal-use-of-the-hands penalty. Whitehair expressed remorse, saying defensive lineman Dexter Lawrence bulled him back, and he got his hands caught up by Lawrence's face mask.

But the Bears offense regrouped later in the second quarter, when the Trubisky-Miller connection came alive.

The second-year wide receiver has had flashes this season but nothing consistent. And last week, Bears coach Matt Nagy said Miller ran the wrong route depth on Trubisky's interception against the Rams, a nod at a recurring problem with details.

So it was a take-notice couple of minutes when Miller had four catches for 42 yards on the final drive of the first half, which was capped by Eddy Pineiro's 26-yard field goal.

"When we get the ball in our hands, we get in a groove," Miller said. "That's what happened. We just started to feel untouchable, like nobody could guard us, and it gives Mitch that confidence as well when he sees us catching the good balls he threw.

"So we're just going to try to continue riding this positive wave."

Trubisky got the next two scoring drives started with big throws to Robinson, a 23-yarder on the second play of the third quarter and a 49-yarder later in the third. Robinson beat Ballentine on that route too, and Trubisky made a nice throw to lead Robinson down the right sideline.

"I have ultimate trust in him," Nagy said of Robinson. "There's not many guys in this league on the other side of the ball that I feel like he's going to be at a disadvantage agaınst.

"I really love the way he practices and plays. He's a really good one-on-one guy, and he also understands zones."

There were a couple of miscues, including a miscommunication on Trubisky's throw to Robinson that was picked off in the end zone. Robinson also was flagged for offensive pass interference on the Bears' two-point conversion attempt in the third

But for the most part, Sunday marked a solid day for Robinson and Miller - one the Bears offense could use more of down the stretch against better opponents.

"We like A-Rob in the slot, especially against the guys they had lining up over him, and he did a great job getting open all day long," Trubisky said. "If you put him in favorable matchups he's usually going to win. The O-line did a great job giving me time, and I've just got to give him the ball."

Bears' fifth win. Straight Malört.

The Bears outlasted the 2-9 Giants, thanks in no small part to two missed second-quarter field goals by the visitors. Once again, the Bears had to overcome a dreadful start offensively, which they did with a 16-point third-quarter

Still, the Bears' 19 points were the second-fewest scored against the Giants this season. Trubisky threw for a touchdown and ran for another but also threw two interceptions.

"Happy we won," Trubisky said, "but it's not good enough. Not nearly good enough from this offense, from myself. We can't have the turnovers."

That familiar refrain begs the questions: What is left to learn about Trubisky, coach Matt Nagy and the underperforming offense in five more games as the Bears play out the string?

As the Bears continue to measure Trubisky's growth, sometimes in millimeters, what could possibly mitigate their need to create a quarterback competition in 2020?

Sunday's game against the NFL's 25th-ranked pass defense at least appeared to be an opportunity to sharpen the offense's processes, generate some confidence for Trubisky and head into the Thanksgiving game against the Lions on the front foot.

Instead, the offense was inconsistent, sloppy and, as usual, underwhelming.

The Bears turned the ball over twice, including one Trubisky interception in the end zone. They had five empty possessions before they finally scored.

They averaged 2.5 vards per carry. They burned several time outs because of pre-snap misalignment or miscommunication. They scored one touchdown in four red-zone trips.

There were familiar miscues. Center Cody Whitehair's hands-to-the-face penalty negated a season-long 60-yard completion to receiver Allen Robinson. Wide-open tight end Ben Braunecker dropped a potential 29-yard touch-

"None of that's intentional; it's not because of effort," Nagy said. "So you've got to regroup. We want to be a little bit better in the red zone. And then the other part of it, too, which is obvious, is just the communication part of getting in and out (of the huddle). We had to use those two timeouts for two different reasons. But we know that. We want to get better at it."

Of course, after 11 games, it's too late. The Bears have been at this long enough that they should be better by now. Repeated stumbles because of personnel groupings and alignments processes the Bears fully control — are the hallmark of a bad team.

To that end, there were few revelations Sunday.

Trubisky's first interception followed Braunecker's drop, leaving the Bears with no points when they had multiple plays to score.

The pick resulted from a miscommunication with Robinson, specifically how Robinson tried to attack middle linebacker Alec Ogletree on a route over the middle on third-and-9 from the Giants' 14-yard line.

"I thought he was going to do one thing; he was seeing something else," Trubisky said.

Trubisky's second interception was a deep ball intended for Javon Wims on a post. Despite a clean pocket, the ball was 5 yards underthrown.

"It can't happen," Trubisky said. "I thought I could put a little more on it (but) couldn't. Bad decision, forced."

Trubisky was hard on himself after the game, speaking to media in a tone normally reserved for defeat. Through the sting of familiar miscues, though, there were positive moments for him to see if he cared to.

He threw for a season-high 278 yards, completing 25 of 41 passes. Nagy made a concerted effort to move the passing point and get Trubisky outside the pocket.

Trubisky had five completions of at least 19 yards, exploiting the Giants' disastrous secondary and demonstrating a downfield element that has been too rare this season.

His 32-yard touchdown to Robinson down the left seam was well read. When the safety in the middle of the field defended tight end Jesper Horsted on a relatively shallow in-cutting route, Robinson was open deep.

Later in the third quarter, Trubisky followed running back David Montgomery's block into the end zone on a designed run. He finished through contact, showing no signs of the right hip pointer that contributed to Nagy pulling him from last Sunday's loss to Trubisky said he wanted that play called because the Giants were playing zone coverage to protect the end zone from close range and committing few defenders to stopping the run.

When your number is called, you've just got to do your job," Trubisky said. "Everyone else did theirs, so I felt like I needed to finish it off."

As Nagy weighed the offense's mistakes against the victory, he made a point to credit Trubisky for "running 'We have different personnel (groups) that come in and out — it's not easy," he said. "So we want to try to help him out as much as we can. But probably a lot of that stuff y'all don't see. But he did a really good job with that."

Trubisky can add that to his list of

Muffed 2-point PAT turns into missed 48-yard kick

By Colleen Kane

The Bears had a lot of momentum in their favor when Mitch Trubisky ran in for a 2-yard touchdown late in the third quarter of Sunday's 19-14 win over the Giants

Khalil Mack's strip-sack of Giants quarterback Daniel Jones resulted in a takeaway, and the Bears offense capitalized with its fourth straight scoring drive.

Bears fans at Soldier Field had reasons to

And then just as quickly, the Bears reminded everyone not to get too excited. A bizarre sequence unfolded in which they committed back-to-back penalties on a two-point conversion and an extra-point attempt and kicker Eddy Pineiro missed a 48-yard PAT.

Here's how it unfolded.

The Bears set up for a two-point conversion attempt that would make it a 14-point game, a decision Matt Nagy said after the game they had made going into the

But Nagy said he had to burn a timeout when there was a misalignment on the original formation. Nagy was caught by the broadcast shaking his head with a frustrated look at the end of the timeout.

■ Out of the timeout, Trubisky connected with wide receiver Taylor Gabriel in the front right corner of the end zone. But the play was negated when wide receiver Allen Robinson was called for offensive pass interference.

Robinson said he didn't know what he could have done differently. He said he was running an inside route when linebacker Deone Bucannon ran into him.

"It wasn't a pick play," Robinson said. "We had a jet motion, so that flowed the defense to the right, and I'm running an inside route. I don't know if he was following the jet or what, but as he's running toward me, it's full flow toward me.

"I was trying to catch the ball. I had my eyes back to Mitch. You can kind of feel a defender close to you. When it was late and bang-bang, honestly I just was trying to protect myself because I saw a defender coming, and he was trying to run through me. He wasn't trying to go around me. He wasn't trying to go under. He was trying to run through me, so once I saw that, I tried to get out of his way a little bit, but he just kind of ran through me, and they called the pick." ■ With the ball backed up to the Giants 25-yard line after the penalty, Nagy opted to have Pineiro kick the extra point. But with 11 men on the field for the attempt, a 12th player - defensive lineman Brent Urban - ran onto the field late. The Bears were called for an illegal substitution.

Nagy said right tackle Bobby Massie usually would have been in for the Bears at that point, but Massie suffered an ankle injury and was out. The replay showed Bears players motioning to the sideline before Urban ran in, as they apparently didn't know coaches had replaced Massie.

"I think some of our players on the line noticed that Bobby wasn't out there and thought we had less (players, but) we were good," Nagy said. "The clock is running down. There's just a little miscommunication between players and coaches just because of the norm that they're used to see 70 (Massie) out there and he wasn't."

■ With another 5 yards lost to that penalty, Pineiro then had to attempt a 48-yard extra

The rookie kicker had bounced back from a rough game last week against the Rams when he missed two field-goal attempts. He made field goals from 26 and 24 yards and an extra point on the Bears' previous three drives Sunday.

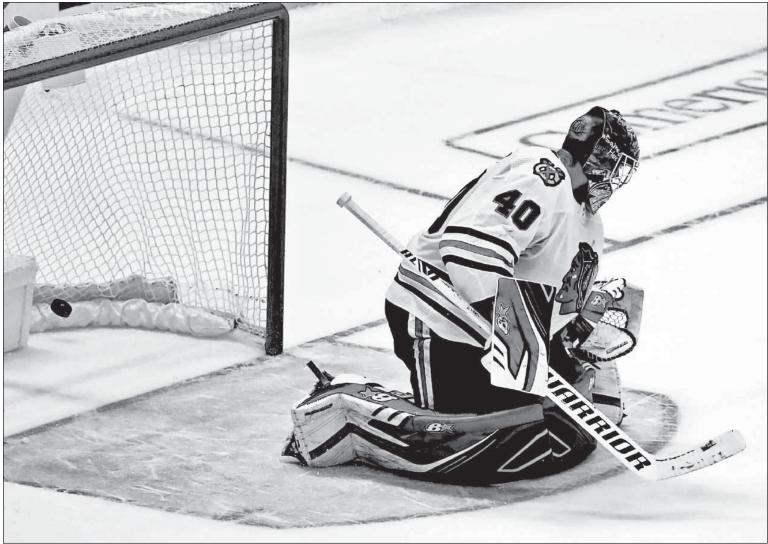

But he pushed his last kick wide left, and the Bears' lead stayed 19-7. The Bears kicker has now missed 4 of 9 field-goal attempts and 2 of 9 extra-point attempts in his last five games. The sequence ultimately didn't cost the Bears the game, but it killed some good cheer. And the Bears didn't score again.

positives. Now he has two.

Robin Lehner gives up a shootout goal to the Stars' Joe Pavelski on Saturday. Lehner has excelled in regulation but has struggled in shootouts.

Shot down decisive

Hawks' dilemma in goal: Lehner great in regulation, among worst in shootouts

By JIMMY GREENFIELD

The good news is there are no shootouts in

The bad news? If the Blackhawks can't win some shootouts during the season, the playoffs won't be an issue.

There are other reasons the Hawks will have to scratch and claw for a spot in the postseason, but getting an extra point in the standings from winning a shootout would help considerably.

This season, the Hawks have played in three shootouts and lost all of them, the equivalent of losing 1½ games in the standings.

Don't think that's a big deal? It is. If the Hawks had taken those three points, they'd have the final wild-card spot ahead of the Golden Knights, whom they trailed heading into Sunday's games by - you guessed it three points.

Robin Lehner was spectacular in the Hawks' 2-1 shootout loss to the Stars on Saturday night. He stopped 40 shots, the third time this season he has had 40-plus saves. Last season, when Lehner was a Vezina Trophy finalist with the Islanders, the most saves he hadin a game was

Lehner's latest masterpiece gave him a .938 save percentage in 13 appearances, including 12 starts, and moved him into first place in save percentage among all NHL goalies who have played at least seven games. But after failing to stop Joe Pavelski and Tyler Seguin during

"I don't know what's tough about them or not tough about them. I just don't seem to make the save in the shootout, and I do on the breakaways."

- Blackhawks goalie Robin Lehner

Saturday's shootout, Lehner's shootout save percentage dropped to .200 (1-for-5).

By comparison, Cam Ward had one of the worst save percentages in the NHL last season for the Hawks but stopped each of the five shootout goals he saw.

And Lehner has no explanation for it.

"I don't know what's tough about them or not tough about them," he said. "I just don't seem to make the save in the shootout, and I do on the breakaways. It's a little bit different in speed for me. I've tried to do a bunch of different things. But it is what it is."

It hasn't always been this way for Lehner. He has played in 30 shootouts and, oddly enough, his play in them started to go south right at the halfway mark.

Lehner was 33-for-52 over the first 15 shootout games of his career, a 63.5% stop rate that's decent enough. This season, NHL goalies have stopped 174 of 246 shots for a

But over his last 15 shootouts, including Saturday night's 0-for-2 effort against the Stars, Lehner is just 16-for-43 for a 37.2% rate.

Jonathan Toews, Patrick Kane and Alex DeBrincat are a combined 2-for-6 this season, which doesn't seem very good, but it's actually higher than the 29.3% conversion rate for all NHL shooters.

So can anything be done about Lehner's shootout woes?

One suggestion — to replace Lehner with Corey Crawford for just the shootout — has a couple of problems. Crawford stopped just one of three tries in a 3-2 loss to the Penguins in his lone shootout.

The other issue is Hawks coach Jeremy Colliton didn't seem interested in trying this, and it's his call.

"Yeah, that'd be tough," Colliton said. "Robin played really well. I don't think it's fair to talk about the shootout as well as he played for the rest of the 65 minutes. He was really good."

Far more games that finish tied after regulation end in the wide-open extra session that's played with three skaters per side. So it's possible the Hawks won't have many more shootouts and it won't be an issue that could hurt their playoff chances.

On the other hand, having already lost all three shootoutchances, maybe it already has.

Rookie Coby White, who starred at North Carolina and was playing in front of hundreds of family and friends from his hometown of Goldsboro, N.C., added 28 points.

LaVine's late bucket ended a flurry for the Bulls, who trailed by five with less than 10 seconds left before Tomas Satoronsky hit a 3-pointer with 7.1 seconds remaining. On the last play, LaVine scooped up the loose ball after White forced a turnover by Devonte Graham.

"Once I saw the ball on the ground I was going for it," said LaVine, who scooped up the basketball, stepped behind the 3-point line and fired in the game-winner.

LaVine, who entered averaging 19.5 points per game, started his 17th straight game and hit his first three shots all 3s — and two free throws for 11 points in the first 7½ minutes of the game and stayed hot the rest of the night.

"I've always said Zach is a really good guy and a good person and he wants to do well," Boylen said. "He wants to help the team. My job is to push the guy to a place he can't take himself and that happens sometimes with tough conversations, meetings and maybe some uncomfortable moments, but that's what my job is. The credit needs to go to him and his focus, energy and his effort.

"He is always good when we coach him and talk to him. He wants to play better, I want him to play better and I am really happy for him."

Terry Rozier III had a game-high 28 points for the Hornets. Marvin Williams scored 19 of his 21 points in the second half as the Hornets recovered from a 14-point deficit in the first half and led by 11 early in the fourth quarter.

The Hornets were still ahead by seven at 112-105 with 32.1 seconds left.

"I mean that's just a tough, tough loss," said Graham, who had 18 points. "Especially for me, turning the ball over right there in that situation. But Zach made an extreme shot and you just have to tip your hat to him for that."

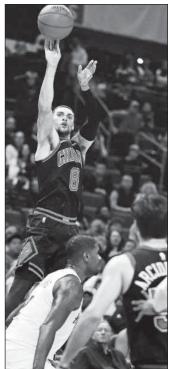

The Hornets' previous six victories had come in games in which they had trailed by 10 or more points. And Saturday's game was seconds away from a seventh win after overcoming a double-digit deficit.

"There was a lot of good to get back in that game," Hornets coach James Borrego said. "I thought our guys played inspired. We won the boards and we won the paint. We did a number of things very well in this game. Gave ourselves a great shot, a great opportunity there, we just have not been able to close these last few games.

"You've got to give them credit. LaVine obviously made some incredible shots there down the stretch."

Company man: When told pregame the NBA was considering changes that would alter the regular-season and postseason schedules, Boylen offered his blanket support.

"I'm a huge Adam Silver fan and I'm going to worry about coaching my team," Boylen said of the league commissioner. "If they feel that's best for the league, we're all reaping the benefits of what's been laid down by the league office. And I'll continue to trust. Whatever they want, I'll support."

OT penalty, 2 waved-off goals chap Toews

By JIMMY GREENFIELD

DALLAS - Every point is precious, even if it's one you weren't likely to get in the first

The Blackhawks were facing a Stars team that had won five straight, taken 19 of their last 20 possible points and gone 12-1-1 since Oct. 19

Yet the Hawks marched into American Airlines Center with confidence and swagger despite owning a two-game losing streak. And that's how they played.

Which is why coming away with only one point after Saturday's 2-1 shootout loss to the Stars was so disappointing.

"Thought it was quite a good effort from us," Hawks coach Jeremy Colliton said. "Can't fault the work ethic at all, thought we competed hard. Of course, there's some details in our game we've got to continue to get better at because we want to get two points, no question, especially against a divisional opponent.

The Hawks get another shot at the Stars on Tuesday back at the United Center.

Here are two takeaways from Saturday's loss:

1. Jonathan Toews was ticked off about the OT penalty and two disallowed goals in the third period. The first thing Jonathan Toews offered was praise. The second was frustration.

The Hawks captain badly wanted this game knowing what it would mean to begin this stretch of five games against divisional opponents with a victory instead of settling for a single point.

"It's a good sign that we can kill penalties, we can hang in there in a hostile building against a team that's playing a lot of good hockey right now," he said. "Obviously, they're on a heck of a streak right now, too, so for us to keep them to one goal until the end the way we did, I think there's a lot of positives there. Obviously you want to find a way to come away with two points but ..."

Then Toews turned his attention to what was really on his

"I don't know, was it an obvious call in overtime?'

He was referring to a too-manymen-on-the-ice penalty midway through the extra session that gave the Stars a four-on-three advantage for a huge chunk of OT. Even though the Hawks were able to kill the penalty, it denied them a true chance to put the game away in overtime.

As for the answer to his question, none of the reporters interviewing him had seen replays showing why the call was made or how egregious it was.

'It's not like something you have to call because it's so obnoxiously obvious," Toews said. "I try not to make excuses and complain about calls to the media, but in overtime, you're going to throw one like that on us? Good on the guys to kill off the two-minute penalty four-on-three in overtime, but that hurts our chances trying to win the game. We like our chances three-on-three."

The Hawks had two possible goals disallowed in the third period that Toews also wasn't pleased about. The first one happened when a whistle blew during a scrum at the goal line, and the second came when Dylan Strome knocked the puck out of the air with his stick and an official ruled it was above his shoulder.

The issue Toews had was that officials quickly decided each situation wasn't a goal.

"When there's a couple calls that are debatable, why do you have to wave it off so quickly?" Toews asked. "Can't you give it a chance and let it go to the review and check it out? Hard to turn those over when they wave it off right away."

2. The defensemen are starting to consistently chip in on offense. The sight of Alex De-Brincat in a two-on-one rush up ice is one of the more common things you'll see in a Hawks game. But with defenseman Olli Maatta? And Maatta's the finisher?

That's not something you'll see very often. "(Olli) definitely has that in his game," Colliton said. "He's pretty good at jumping in and nice to see it go in for him."

A lot of shots have been going in lately for the Hawks' blueliners, who have goals in three straight. Maatta's goal was the eighth in their last six games and his first of the season.

Colliton is obviously pleased whenever anybody scores a goal but kept the focus on what Maatta will be doing the vast majority of his time on the ice.

"Biggest thing for him is to defend," Colliton said. "I think like everyone on our team on the back end, we'd like to get more pucks to the net. We'd like to give the forwards something to work with, get (pucks) through right away, create some havoc at the net and either we score or we get a rebound or recover a puck and then we make a play from there."

Doncic guides Mavs to 5th straight win

News services

Luka Doncic scored 41 points, Tim Hardaway Jr. added a season-high 31 and the Mavericks never trailed in a 137-123 victory over the Rockets on Sunday in Houston.

The Mavericks scored 45 points in the first quarter and were up 78-60 at halftime. Hardaway had 19 in the half, Doncic 17 and Kristaps Porzingis 15.

Porzingis finished with 23 points and 13 rebounds, while Doncic had 10 assists and six rebounds. Doncic and Hardaway each made five 3-pointers. The Mavericks has won five straight, scoring at least 137 in the last three. The Rockets have three straight after winning eight in a row.

James Harden had 32 points for the Rockets, but he was just 2 of 15 on 3-pointers. The Rockets made just 10 of 44 3-point attempts.

Walker has neck sprain: Celtics All-Star guard Kemba Walker was diagnosed with a sprained neck after leaving Friday's game against the Nuggets following a collision with teammate Semi Ojeleye.

Walker was carted off the court on a stretcher and transported to a Denver hospital.

Coach Brad Stevens said Walker was doubtful for Monday's game against the Kings, but he didn't rule him out entirely.

"He feels good," Stevens said. "It's kind of a minor miracle based on what we saw the other day. But the strain is real."

Preds' Arvidsson out 4-6 weeks with injury

Associated Press

The Predators announced Sunday that forward Viktor Arvidsson will miss four to six weeks after hurting his lower body when cross-checked during Saturday night's 4-2 win over the Blues. He was cross-checked by Robert Bortuzzo at 6:08 of the first period with the Blues defenseman given only a 2-minute penalty.

The league gave Bortuzzo a four-game suspension as a repeat offender. Arvidsson had an assist but played only 4:15.

Red Wings' skid hit 6: James Reimer made 19 saves to earn his 22nd career shutout and first of the season as the Hurricanes beat the Red Wings

2-0 on Sunday in Detroit.

Sebastian Aho had a goal and an assist, and Teuvo Teravainen also scored to help the Hurricanes win for the sixth time in seven games.

Jimmy Howard stopped 34 shots for Red Wings, who have lost six straight (0-4-2).Aho scored with 9:23 left in the second period. He put in the rebound of his attempted pass from the high slot, which had gone off the boards behind the net and caromed into the crease. Aho raced in and poked it into the net before Howard could find and cover the puck. It was Aho's 12th goal and his third score in the last four games.

Teravainen added an empty-net, short-handed goal with 1:13 left. It was his seventh goal.

Rahm wins tourney, European season title

Jon Rahm is $5 million richer after capturing the Race to Dubai title Sunday with a victory in the season-ending World Tour Championship in Dubai, UAE, with a birdie on the final hole.

The world No. 5 got up and down from a greenside bunker on the 18th hole to shoot a final-round 4-under 68, finish at 19-under 269 and win the tournament by a stroke over England's Tommy Fleetwood (65), who also would have become the season champion with a victory.

Rahm is only the second Spaniard to finish a season as the European Tour's top player, after late Hall of Famer Seve Ballesteros.

■ Tyler Duncan made a 12-foot putt on the second hole of a playoff to beat Webb Simpson and win the PGA Tour's season-ending RSM Classic in St. Simons Island, Ga. It was the 30-year-old Duncan's first career title. ... Sei Young Kim of South Korea made a 25-foot birdie on the final hole to win the LPGA Tour's season-ending Tour Championship in Naples, Fla. Kim earned $1.5 million, the richest prize in the history of women's golf, with the one-stroke, wire-to-wire victory. It was her third title of the year.

Boxing: Deontay Wilder landed a vicious right hand to stop Luis Ortiz in the seventh round Saturday night in Las Vegas to retain his heavyweight title. Wilder improved to 42-0-1 with 41 knockouts, while Ortiz fell to 31-2...

College basketball: Freshman Casey Morsell scored 19 points, including the go-ahead 3 with 1:02 remaining, and defending national champ and No. 7 Virginia (6-0) rallied past Arizona State 48-45 to win the Hall of Fame Tip-Off Tournament in Uncasville, Conn.

College football: Greg Schiano won't be returning to Rutgers because the school and its former coach were unable to come to an agreement on a deal, The AP reported. Schiano, who spent 11 seasons at Rutgers before leaving for the NFL in 2012, was offered an 8-year, $32 million contract, with $25 million guaranteed, along with $7.5 million to spend on coaches and operations staff such as recruiting coordinators and strength and conditioning coaches. The two sides couldn't agree on what investments into facilities and infrastructure were needed for Rutgers to be able to compete in the Big Ten. Chris Ash was fired five games into his fourth season. ... LSU remained atop The AP poll after its 56-20 home win over Arkansas on Saturday, but No. 2 Ohio State received nine first-place votes - five more than the previous week after its 28-17 victory over then-No. 9 Penn State.

Also: Top-ranked Rafael Nadal beat Denis Shapovalov 6-3, 7-6 (7) to give host Spain its sixth Davis Cup title with a 2-0 win over first-time finalist Canada. ... Andrew Harris ran for 134 yards and a TD and caught a scoring pass to help the Winnipeg Blue Bombers beat the Hamilton Tiger-Cats 33-12 in the Grey Cup in Calgary, Alberta.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Ohio State QB Justin Fields runs for a first down Saturday against Penn State. But the Buckeyes' focus is on next weekend — against Michigan.

Next: 'The big one'

How Ohio State-Michigan outcome could help propel 2 Big Ten teams into playoff

If you're a network that shelled out jillions for Big Ten broadcasting rights, this is the stuff of dreams. Ohio State needs to beat bitter rival Michigan on Saturday to remain unblemished. The surging Wolver ines will be home, where they have not lost since 2017. Can Jim Harbaugh finally

the playoff chase? But first, here are five things we learned about the Big Ten after Week 13:

1. There is no 24-hour rule at Ohio State. At least not during Michigan week. Minutes after the Buckeyes took down Penn State in what was the marquee national game of the week, offensive lineman Branden Bowen said this: "Next week is the big one. It's a war. It's going to be bloody. It will take everything in us to win."

The Buckeyes have won seven straight in the series. Not since the days of Michigan's Fielding Yost has either team won eight in

"We've had this game on our minds for the whole year," Buckeyes linebacker Pete Werner

Said coach Ryan Day: "We live it every day."

The Ohio State players punctuate workouts with "the team up north" in mind. An extra sprint? An extra bench press rep? They do it in preparation for Thanksgiving Saturday.

Same for Michigan, which celebrated its victory at Indiana for about as long as it took to walk to the locker room.

"No one was even thinking about this game," defensive end Aidan Hutchinson told reporters. "We were all ready for next week."

Buckeyes players receive a gold pin in the shape of pants for every victory over Michigan. The tradition stems from 1934, when new Ohio State coach Francis Schmidt declared the dominant Wolverines "put their pants on one leg at a time, just like us."

Defensive lineman Jashon Cornell already has four pins, but none is in his possession.

"My mom has them around her neck," he said of Sheena Cornell, who wears them in a necklace. "I've got to get my fifth pair of gold pants."

2. The Big Ten is in a sensational spot in terms of the College Football Playoff. Herm Edwards' Arizo-

off rankings. Utah (10-1) has to win out and do it convincingly to have a shot. And the only viable Big 12 team, Oklahoma, barely beat TCU.

GREENSTEIN

On the Big Ten

The Buckeyes probably could lose to Michigan - shhh, networks don't want to hear that and make the playoff with an impressive win at the Big Ten championship game in India-

Minnesota clinched its first 10-win regular season since 1905 with a dominant victory at Northwestern. If the Gophers beat Wisconsin at home Saturday and shock Ohio State at Lucas Oil Stadium, they'd have a better resume — a conference title with wins over three ranked teams — than Alabama.

And in that scenario, assuming Ohio State beats Michigan, would the Big Ten get two teams in the playoff? Very possible, especially if LSU wins out and makes the SEC a one-bid league.

3. Silver Football voting could be close. The Chicago Tribune award has recognized the Big Ten's best football player since 1924, 11 years before the Heisman Trophy was created. Four Ohio State players have won it since 2013 — Braxton Miller, Ezekiel Elliott, J.T. Barrett and Dwayne Haskins — but a Buckeyes defensive player never has.

How about it, Chase Young? The nation's sack leader has seven in his last two games four against Wisconsin, three versus Penn State. He sacked Northwestern's quarterbacks only once because the Wildcats schemed so hard against him, rolling to the opposite side.

His impact is unreal. Or "unbelievable," as Ohio State coach Ryan Day put it.

"Chase is a different player," said Jashon Cornell, who sometimes lines up next to him. "He scares opponents. He's the heart of our defense."

Young broke the school's single-season sacks record in just nine games. He has  $16\frac{1}{2}$  — that's  $2\frac{1}{2}$  more than anyone else in the FBS.

The Silver Football vote is determined by Big Ten head coaches, who email in a ballot with their first- and secondplace choices. The only rule: They cannot vote for a player on their team.

Who else figures to get votes? ■ Wisconsin running back Jonathan Taylor, who broke an FBS record Saturday with his 12th career 200-yard rushing day. His 5,856 yards are the most ever for an FBS player through his junior season. But he did lose two fumbles in the Badgers' romp of Purdue, giving him four on the season and 14 in his career.

■ Ohio State quarterback Justin Fields (33 touchdown passes, 1 interception) and tailback J.K. Dobbins (1,446 rushing vards)

■ Michigan quarterback Shea Patterson, whose best two games came in his last two. He's a combined 44-for-65 with 750 yards, nine touchdowns and one pick against Michigan State and Indiana.

Other possibilities: Minnesota quarterback Tanner Morgan and receivers Tyler Johnson and Rashod Bateman; Penn State speedster KJ Hamler; Wisconsin linebackers Zack Baun and Chris Orr; Minnesota cornerback Antoine Winfield Jr. and in, a totally fair world, Northwestern defensive end Joe Gaziano.

4. Paul Bunyan's Axe has never been sharper. The winner of the Minnesota-Wisconsin game gets the trophy, as the players will pretend to chop down the opponent's goal post. It is the most-played rivalry in FBS history – 128 games starting in 1890. And get this: The series record is 60-60-8.

You could make a case that Minnesota's incredible 2019 season started on Nov. 24, 2018. That's when the Gophers, as 111/2-point underdogs, thrashed the Badgers 37-15 in Madison.

"This," Gophers coach P.J. Fleck said after that game, "is why you coach."

Wisconsin improved to 9-2 after beating Purdue on Saturday. Linebacker Chris Orr addressed the Camp Randall Stadium crowd after the game, saying: "We need as many of y'all up there at Minnesota. We're going to get our axe back!"

5. Five teams remain in the Rose Bowl hunt. The highestranked Big Ten team not in the College Football Playoff will go to the Rose Bowl. Minnesota has not been to Pasadena since the 1961 season.

If Wisconsin beats Minnesota, the Badgers have a shot to return. Also possible: Michigan, if it beats Ohio State. Less likely: Ohio State and Penn State.

WEEK 13 POWER RANKINGS

Here are the Tribune's latest Big Ten power rankings, with last week's ranking in parentheses:

1. Ohio State (1) In the Buckeyes' perfect world, they'd not only beat Michigan and win the Big Ten title game. They'd win big to earn the playoff's No. 1 seed. 2. Minnesota (2) Has P.J. Fleck selected his outfit yet for ESPN's "College GameDay" visit? 3. Wisconsin (4)

You've surely heard about Jonathan Taylor's big day. But how about Zach Hintze booting a school-record 62-yard field goal?

4. Penn State (3) Impressive freshman quarterback Will Levis got his scholarship offer after Justin Fields decommitted in favor of Geor-5. Michigan (5) The Wolverines' leading rusher had just 46 yards and no one cared. Shea Patterson is sizzling. 6. lowa (6)

After Keith Duncan set the Big Ten single-season record with his 27th field goal, Hawkeyes fans booed. They wanted Iowa to go for it on fourth-

box Bowl? 8. Illinois (8)

Wild guess that stadium operators will crank up "My Kind of Town" if the Illini beat Northwestern in Champaign.

9. Purdue (9) Danny Hope, Darrell Hazell and Jeff Brohm are a combined 0-10 against Wisconsin. 10. Michigan State (10) Good news, bad news: The

Spartans have to beat Maryland to make a bottom-tier bowl, probably in Detroit. 11. Nebraska (11) @FauxPelini put it best: I'M EXTREMELY GLAD MARY-LAND JOINED THE BIG TEN 12. Northwestern (13) Every (remaining) Northwestern fan is asking: Hey, Andrew Marty, where have you been all season?

13. Maryland (12) The Terps were six-point underdogs to Nebraska and lost by 47. On senior day.

14. Rutgers (14) Number of first downs in the first half: zero. Chance at saving face this season: Less than zero.

Cubs eye market on Bryant, Contreras

Sox, Braves signings will help determine demand for 2 veterans

By Mark Gonzales

The Braves and White Sox have done their best to spark the hot stove league by making unusually early free-agent signings.

"Our preference is to convert on our targets as quickly as possible," Sox general manager Rick Hahn said Thursday on a conference call to discuss the signing of catcher Yasmani Grandal to a four-year, $73 million contract.

The Sox addressed a need immediately while helping set the market not only for free agents, but also for potential trades such as the Cubs and two-time All-Star catcher Willson Contr-

Meanwhile, the Braves' signing of free-agent reliever Will Smith could have an indirect impact on Cubs third baseman Kris Bryant's future, which isn't tied exclusively to a players association grievance regarding his service time and whether he will become a free agent after next season or 2021.

It's no secret teams such as the Braves, Rangers and Mets are seeking a third baseman, and Anthony Rendon and Josh Donaldson are among the top free agents who play third.

The Braves were willing to lose their second-highest draft pick in 2020 to sign Smith to a three-year, $39 million contract last week. Rendon and Donaldson likely will command much larger deals, and interested teams that fall out of those sweepstakes might shift their attention quickly to a trade for Bryant.

Braves general manager Alex Anthopoulos oversees one of the top farm systems in the majors and appears to be leaning toward acquiring an All-Star third baseman rather than sticking with Johan Camargo or Austin Riley, who also can play outfield.

"We are actively trying to look outside the organization," Anthopoulos told MLB Network Radio, adding that Camargo and Riley remain options.

Contreras' case is a little more complicated. As a first-time arbitration-eligible player, there is no rush to trade him, and his 2020 season will be affordable — MLBtraderumors.com projects his salary at $4.5 million.

Contreras also does an exceptional job of working with veteran Jon Lester and in 2019 became the first Cubs catcher to start consecutive All-Star games since Gabby Hartnett in 1936-37.

Young, productive catchers are extremely hard to find, and Contreras, 27, caught at least 99 games in each of the last three seasons despite suffering hamstring injuries that cost him at least 20 games every year.

The Rays, with a glut of talented young infielders, could be a potential trade match for the

The Cubs would need to add a catcher if they trade Contreras. Another consideration is that active rosters are expected to expand to 26 players - with a maximum of 13 pitchers.

Contreras, who switched to catcher from third base in 2012 with Class A Boise, has played first and left field. And backup catcher Victor Caratini, whom the Braves drafted as a third baseman, also can play first.

"It's way too early in the process to decide how we're going to use that 26th man," Hahn said when asked about the current glut of Sox catchers. "But I do think you're going to have a lot of clubs (that) do carry a third catcher, especially one that has some additional flexibility."

Prognosis good for Tua

But medical experts predict Dolphins will have to make call on QB without all the facts

BY HAL HABIBThe Palm Beach Post

o a segment of Dolphins fans — perhaps a majority of Dolphins fans — that wasn't just the Alabama quarterback going down awkwardly Nov. 16 under the weight of two defenders. It wasn't just the Alabama quarterback screaming in pain as he tried to get up. And it wasn't just the Alabama quarterback undergoing surgery to repair an unusual football injury.

It was, potentially, the face of the Dolphins for the next decade.

You're not hearing the phrase "Tank for Tua" anymore, not after he suffered a dislocated right hip and posterior wall fracture requiring surgery. But interviews with two prominent South Florida physicians with decades of experience treating athletes on the Dolphins, Hurricanes, Marlins and Yankees — not to mention evaluating the health of NFL draft prospects — reveals that anyone scratching Tagovailoa off his draft board could regret it.

"Every dislocation is different," said Dr. Dan Kanell, an orthopedic specialist who spent 23 years as the Dolphins' team physician. "And so you can't say what happened to Bo Jackson is going to happen to this kid. This kid can have a very optimistic, total recovery."

Kanell and Dr. Lee Kaplan, director of the University of Miami's UHealth Sports Medicine Institute, agree that the next three to six months will be critical in determining the extent of Tagovailoa's recovery.

Unfortunately, the Dolphins don't have six months. When they draft in April, they will be making one of the most important decisions in their history — especially if Tagovailoa is available when they select.

So how are NFL teams to make an informed decision on a prospect who had been pegged to go first overall? Kaplan, in his 15th year assisting the Steelers at the combine, outlined the process.

"He'll have X-rays and MRIs at the combine," Kaplan said. "People will look and see if the fracture is healed. They'll evaluate the joint surfaces based on the MRIs, and assuming that he's healing well, he'll — at a later date, because he won't be ready for the combine in three months — he'll be retested in April or sometime before the draft, with a late pro day. And then you can see him moving around."

Many questions will be answered. But not all.

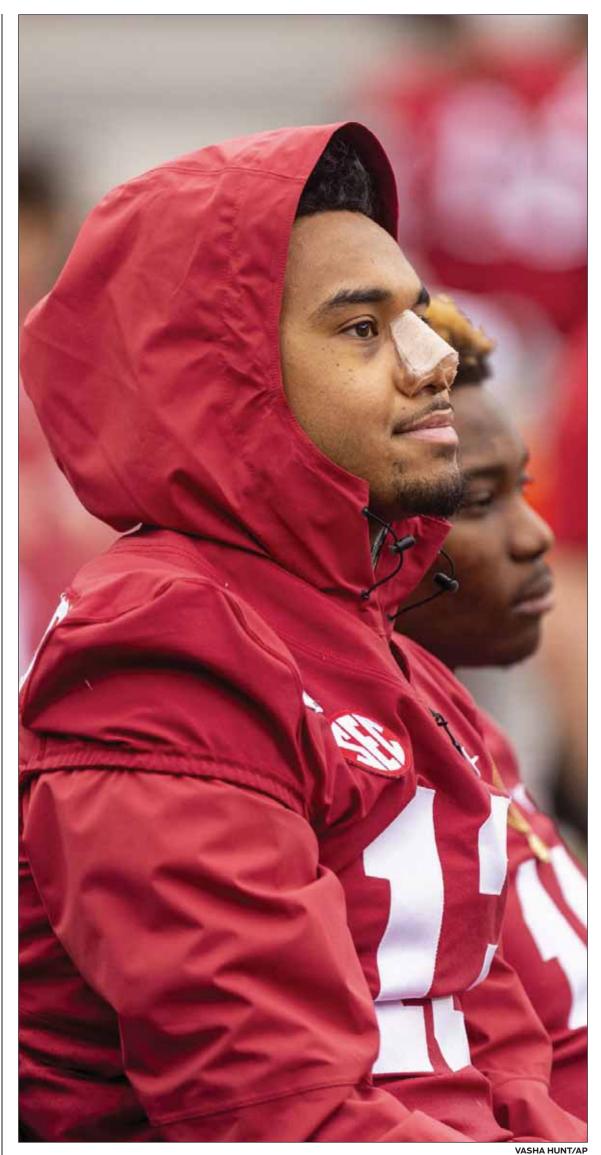

"Will he have a risk? Yeah, because he hasn't re-established health to play again," Kaplan said. "But assuming that the fracture heals and everything else, there's no doubt that somebody will think highly of him. It only takes one of 32 teams."

of 32 teams." There are many reasons Kanell and Kaplan might sound more optimistic than you might have expected when Tagovailoa went down. With few examples of football players suffering this type of injury, longtime fans may have flashed back to the most famous case, which ended the career of the multitalented Jackson. The Raiders running back's problem was avascular necrosis following his dislocation and fracture. AVN occurs when the blood supply to the area is cut off and the bone dies. In Tagovailoa's case, first responders reset the hip in the socket promptly.

"They got it reduced immediately, the doctors on the field and the trainers," Kanell said. "That's really a key. As you could see, they did superb care at the time of injury."

Backing up a few moments, it helps to understand how the injury occurred, although the squeamish might wince just by reading Kaplan's description.

"Basically what happened is the hip is a ball-in-socket joint, and the force, the way that he landed, his femur, thigh bone, was 90 degrees to the ground," Kaplan said. "They landed on him and the force of the defensive player went through

Tua Tagovailoa is helped off the field Nov. 16 against Mississippi State. His injury complicates his draft status.

"Will he have a risk? Yeah, because he hasn't re-established health to play again. But assuming that the fracture heals and everything else, there's no doubt that somebody will think highly of him. It only takes one of 32 teams."

his pelvis, and what happened was it pushed right through his pelvis and fractured the back posterior wall of his pelvis."

posterior wall of his pelvis."

Kaplan called the injury
"very unusual." Players being tackled rarely are caught in that 90-degree angle Kaplan described.

"This is the type of injury that happens in a car accident where somebody is seated and the dashboard comes into their knee and dislocates their hip," Kaplan said. "If you think about it, oftentimes you have to be extracted from the car. You have to get to the hospital. You have to do X-rays. They have to do all these tests.

"He had the fortune of going in the locker room, getting X-rays, having excellent doctors relocate his hip right away, and so some of the long-term ramifications which happen when a joint is out of place for an extended period of time just didn't happen with him."

Tagovailoa is under the care of Dr. Lyle Cain, the Alabama team physician, and orthopedic surgeon Chip Routt. After surgery was performed last week, Cain released a statement calling it a success. Tagovailoa was even seen on video via social media in good spirits in his hospital bed.

"Tua's prognosis is excellent, and we expect him to make a full recovery," Cain said.

Kaplan called Cain "a great doctor." Kanell pointed out that surgery was performed at Houston's Memorial Hermann-Texas Medical Center: "They have a tremendous trauma center for this type of injury."

Not everyone is convinced Tagovailoa will make a full recovery. Dr. Michael Banffy, the Rams' team doctor, told al.com he expects long-term effects.

"It's likely he won't have the same speed and mobility that we're used to seeing in him," Banffy told the publication. "That's probably the most predictable long-term outcome."

Kanell took exception.

"There's no way to determine that," Kanell said. "That's totally inaccurate, because no one can predict that at this stage. The best people to predict this are the guys who operated on him, the people following him. That's unfair to the kid to say that."

But what if Banffy is correct? What if Tagovailoa isn't as quick on his feet? Kaplan said that might not be as ominous as it sounds. He cited the Packers' Aaron Rodgers and the Patriots' Tom Brady as examples.

"You're talking about an elite athlete," Kaplan said of Tagovailoa. "So even if he loses a fraction of what he has, especially at that position, he'll learn how to compensate doing other things, such as throwing the ball a little differently or better.

"There's no quarterback that doesn't lose a step at the NFL level over time. And yet there are many, like the one in Green Bay and the one in New England, that just get better with time, and that's just because they learn how to compensate for that."

disposed to reinjuring his hip?
"He shouldn't be," Kaplan said. "If the cartilage is OK and there's no long-term cartilage effects, he should be fine."

History of Michigan, OSU resilience after worst rivalry losses

By Ryan Ford

Detroit Free Press

Let's get this out of the way: 62-39. 62-39? 62-39! Sound familiar? That was the score of last season's game between Ohio State and Michigan, won — as you might have heard once or twice in the last year — decisively by the Buckeyes.

And now here we are, with the Wolverines preparing to try to avenge their 23-point loss and end a skid in which they have lost seven straight to the Buckeyes and 14 of 15 in the rivalry. Of course, it's not the first time either team has lost by at least 20 points in the series — it's just the most recent.

With that in mind, let's take a look at the six games after beatings of at least 20 points in the rivalry in the last 50 years, dating to Bo Schembechler's first season at Michigan:

Nov. 19, 1977

The year before: Ohio State lost to Michigan 22-0.

Did they get their revenge? Nope. The Buckeyes did at least score, taking an early 3-0 lead in Ann Arbor. But Michigan got a touchdown late in the first half and tacked on another early in the second. Ohio State's defense was solid, allowing just 10 first downs, but its offense couldn't get it done. Michigan got three big stops and benefited from a missed field goal and a late fumble by OSU quarterback Rod Gerald.

That fumble also led to the biggest drama of the afternoon, when OSU coach Woody Hayes punched an ABC cameraman in the stomach on the sideline in frustration. Hayes had regained his composure by the postgame news conference, opening with the statement: "Gentlemen, that was the best game we've ever played and lost."

The Wolverines were outplayed but held on for a 14-6 victory and a spot in the Rose Bowl.

Nov. 21, 1992

The year before: Ohio State lost to Michigan 31-3.

Did they get their revenge? Well, kinda. The Buckeyes didn't win, but they didn't lose either. Instead, they had to settle for a 13-13 tie, and Michigan stayed undefeated for the first time since 1973 and headed to the Rose Bowl.

Quarterback Kirk Herbstreit led the Buckeyes back from a 13-3 fourth-quarter deficit on a soggy afternoon in Columbus, and they scored the tying touchdown on a fourth-down pass from 5 yards out with 4:24 remaining. That finish had some Ohio State fans, well, seeing red, as coach John Cooper opted to kick the extra point for the tie rather than go for two and the win. Cooper, who had yet to beat Michigan in five tries, said after the game: "It never crossed my mind to go for two points."

Ohio State got the ball back later in the game but couldn't pick up any more points, crushing Herbstreit, who complained to the Detroit News: "Believe me, this wasn't anything to celebrate as far as we're concerned. It felt like another loss."

Nov. 19, 1994

The year before: Ohio State lost to Michigan 28-0.

Did they get their revenge? Yes! If you think Jim Harbaugh's seat is getting a little warm after four straight losses to OSU, imagine Cooper's discomfort entering 1994 after five losses and one tie against the Wolverines. It was enough that Michigan co-captain Walter Smith said before the game: "We want to get Cooper fired. That's what I want to do."

Michigan's dreadful offense made sure that didn't happen, putting up just 14 first downs, 271 total yards and two field goals in a 22-6 loss in Columbus. Michigan started strong, driving to the edge of the red zone, but quarterback Todd Collins couldn't connect with fullback Che Foster on fourth-and-1. On its next drive, starting from its own 1, Collins tripped in the end zone for a safety, and the Buckeyes took it from there.

The Michigan defense allowed just 210 yards, but Ohio State continually had strong field position and put it away in the fourth quarter after linebacker Luke Fickell picked off Collins at Michigan's 16-yard line. Cooper lasted six more seasons in Columbus — though he beat Michigan just one more time.

Nov. 21, 2009

The year before: Michigan lost to Ohio State 42-7.

Did they get their revenge? Nope. Michigan fell 21-10, but it really wasn't that close. Freshman quarterback Tate Forcier had five turnovers, including four interceptions, as Michigan's drought against OSU extended to six seasons, or "Day 2,192," as the next day's Free Press put it. Michigan's defense held OSU to just 67 passing yards but was gashed for 251 yards on the ground.

The true culprit was the offense, though, as Forcier noted. He told the Free Press: "I lost that game. ... We're going to come back a new team. I'm not going to let this happen again."

Coach Rich Rodriguez, in his second of three seasons at Michigan, was more succinct: "We'll beat Ohio State when we're better than them."

That never happened under Rodriguez, who was fired after a 37-7 loss to OSU in 2010.

Nov. 26, 2011

The year before: Michigan lost to Ohio State 37-7

Did they get their revenge? Yes! The long wait — 2,926 days, according to the Michigan Stadium scoreboard — was finally over, thanks to a dominant performance by quarterback Denard Robinson. The junior passed for 167 yards and three touchdowns and rushed for 170 yards and two more touchdowns in the Wolverines' 40-34 victory.

The win was particularly sweet for Robinson, who had considered transferring when Rodriguez was replaced as coach by Brady Hoke. Of course, it wasn't easy. The Wolverines had two touchdowns called back via penalty and review in the final three minutes and had to settle for a field goal to make it a six-point game, with the Buckeyes getting the ball back with 1:59 left. But sophomore cornerback Courtney Avery picked off Ohio State QB Braxton Miller with 39 seconds left, and the Wolverines could finally celebrate.

Robinson said it best — "I'm glad I stayed" — echoing Schembechler's "Those who stay" speech more than 40 years earlier.

Nov. 26, 2016

The year before: Michigan lost to Ohio State 42-13.

Did they get their revenge? Not according to the refs. But let's back up: The Wolverines' 30-27 loss in double overtime will live on as simply "The Spot." On fourth-and-1 from the 16, with Michigan leading 27-24 in the second overtime, quarterback J.T. Barrett ran into the line on the left side and appeared to be stopped short of the first down. But officials gave OSU the first down. It was a call that would spawn an offseason of hot takes about officiating, football's antiquated measurement system and, yes,

Of course, the game might not have gone to overtime had quarterback Wilton Speight not had two picks and a goal-line fumble in regulation. Then again, "The Spot" — we're pretty sure Harbaugh is still ticked off about it — wouldn't have mattered had Curtis Samuel not broken free on the next play to scamper 15 yards for the winning score.

Still, that's what will live in infamy for Michigan fans — and for a certain coach as well.

"I'm bitterly disappointed in the officiating. Can't make that any more clear," Harbaugh said after the game.

Spectacular production shows how Paramount has transformed Aurora

By Chris Jones

Downtown Aurora in 2019 can be a beauty. The same few blocks in the 1990s always were a beast. And it is mostly the Paramount Theatre that has sparked the transformation.

The evidence was everywhere on Friday night as I walked from the train station.
Holidays lights were being switched on. Dress rehearsals were taking place inside Amy Morton's swish new restaurant, Stolp Island Social, attached to the theater. Families filled sidewalks that were empty for years. Cars honked and cops directed crowds. And girls in princess dresses were ubiquitous.

You really have to see director Amber Mak's conventional but nonetheless spectacular new

"Superstore" star Lauren Ash relishes the pratfalls of life on her podcast "Giving It Up For Less."

Lauren Ash overshares on hilarious new podcast

By Nina Metz

Best known for her role on the NBC comedy "Superstore," Lauren Ash has added podcaster to her resume with "Giving It Up For Less," which takes advantage of her impulse to overshare. While some celebrities have tightly curated social media accounts that try to create the illusion that they're an open book, with Ash that's the real deal.

Or as her "Superstore" co-star Ben Feldman notes on an early episode: "The podcast is designed to talk about things that your average public figure would probably have a heart attack talking about in front of the people — and yet here we are."

Which prompts Ash to zing back: "I love that you're referring to the public as 'the people' as if we're in ancient Rome."

Launched last month with new episodes posting every Tuesday, the podcast is enormously entertaining. Both fizzy and self-deprecating, it's a fascinating window into the lives of actors.

The oversharing premise "came out of the fact that in the talk show world, I've kind of become known for being pretty candid — sometimes maybe too candid — about my real life," Ash said by phone. "That stuff has brought me as many followers on social media as doing 'Superstore' has, so it felt like obviously people are interested in the ridiculousness that is me as a personality as well as being an actor.

"Like, I really will tell somebody I just met anything about me, so it felt like that was a cool jumping off point.

"And the other thing is that I am somebody who attracts extremes — I attract the uber amazing, successful and hilarious, and I also attract the uber creepy, toxic and delusional. And that's allowed me to have amazing stories and disastrously amazingly stories, and I just don't run out. I was like, how many episodes can I do? And what I'm learning is, a lot. I just have an endless well of ridiculous things that have happened to me."

Conductor Juanjo Mena summons power without noise

By Howard Reich

Conductor Juanjo Mena had ample opportunity to go bombastic during Saturday night's Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert. For both Gustav Holst's "The Planets" and James Lee III's "Sukkot Through Orion's Nebula" are boldly extroverted works calling for grand gestures and massive sonorities.

But Mena resisted obvious temptations, proving that an honest, humanly scaled performance always is preferable to a merely grandiose one.

Mena opened the evening with the CSO's "Sukkot," a joyous piece honoring an ancient Hebraic holiday celebrating the harvest. Composed in 2011, "Sukkot" proceeds through several sections without pause, its opening drum roll and brass fanfare instantly establishing its immense scale.

But from this point forth, "Sukkot" continually changes texture and timbre, its cascading brass lines yielding to flurries of activity across the orchestra; glistening percussion effects brightening serene string passages; and lushly orchestrated sections leading to a muscular finale.

'Frozen 2' heats up weekend box office

Six years after "Frozen" kicked up a pop culture blizzard, the sequel to Elsa, Anna and Olaf's adventures topped the box office with an estimated $127 million debut domestically and $350.2 million worldwide, according to studio estimates Sunday.

The opening for the Walt Disney Co.'s "Frozen 2" buried several records. It's the highest-grossing weekend ever for any animated film globally. It marks a new high in the U.S. and Canada for an animated movie released outside the summer season. And it's the largest opening for any Walt Disney Animation Studios release.

Disney opted for the week ahead of Thanksgiving to open "Frozen 2," meaning it will get a significant second-week bump from kids out of school. The first "Frozen" opened over Thanksgiving, earning $93 million in five days and $67 million for the three-day weekend.

The original, though, quickly grew into a sensation, remaining in the top 10 at the box office for 17 weeks and ultimately grossing $1.27 billion. Propelled in part by the hit song "Let it Go," "Frozen" begat a flurry of merchandizing, untold numbers of Elsa dresses and a Broadway musical. It won two Academy Awards, for best animated feature and original song.

The film brings back much of the talent behind the 2013 original, including the voices of Idina Menzel (Elsa), Kristen Bell (Anna) and Josh Gad (Olaf). Also returning are songwriters Kristen Anderson-Lopez and Robert Lopez.

Frets about coming out to girlfriend

Dear Amy: I'm a 26-yearold male with a gorgeous, amazing girlfriend, a loving family, a successful career, and a house to call my own.

Through college I had lots of girlfriends. From the outside it seems like the perfect picture. For the better part of my life, I've hidden thoughts and feelings about men, brushing them off as a phase.

The problem is that these feelings have begun to get stronger. I realized this year this isn't a phase but a real part of who I am, and I believe I need to embrace it. The problem I have is that even in this culture of acceptance and openness I cannot get over the thought of hurting those around me by admitting to these feelings.

My sex life with my girlfriend has fizzled over the last five years, so maybe this knowledge could bring some comfort to her, but also pain. Not to mention the challenges with friends who have strong conservative views, or my father, who is old-school.

I feel I have to choose between throwing everything I have away or continuing to hide it. I think I'm bisexual, but I haven't felt any sexual feelings toward women in a while. The back-and-forth is killing me.

I don't know what to do. Can you help? — Upset

Dear Upset: You are conflating two experiences: breaking up with a longtime partner and confronting your instincts about your own sexuality. The two challenges are related, but you might be less overwhelmed if you approach them separately.

Yes, ending your relationship will be very hard to do. Your girlfriend will likely be hurt and disappointed, but perhaps not quite surprised. I don't think it is necessary for you to discuss your sexuality with your girlfriend, until you feel emotionally ready. However, remember that she loves and also likes you. She may be able to love and support you through this. She could continue in friendship with you, as an ally. It is not necessary for you to disclose your sexuality to your friends or family until you are more experienced and feel emotionally ready to do so. Coming out is a process, and it begins with you acknowledging to yourself that you want to live authentically and that you have a human right to do so. As hard as it is, and no matter how others react to it, your bravery will liberate you.

The Human Rights Campaign (hrc.org) offers a supportive, comprehensive guide to the comingout process, which I know you would find helpful.

It notes: "There is no right or wrong way to come out or live openly. ... You decide how, where and when, based on what's right for you."

Dear Amy: For the first time in my life, I face the prospect of spending Christmas by myself.

Unfortunately, a surprise expense scuppered my plans to go to my home of origin and I have no close friends within a day's drive.

I have been offered Christmas dinner with the family of a colleague, but spending the day with strangers sounds somehow worse than being alone. I am resigned to a day of movies and cocoa on my own and I think it will be fine. What I don't want is to spend the day feeling sorry for myself.

Any advice for making the most of my circumstances?

— Santa Claused

Dear Claused: My first suggestion is that you look for a way to be of service on Christmas Day, whether through helping to serve dinner at the Salvation Army, walking (or petting) dogs at your local animal shelter, taking a plate of goodies to an elderly neighbor or working as a "shovel Santa" (I just made that up!), shoveling a few sidewalks in your neighborhood.

Check meetup.org for ideas in your area.

I also think you should take your colleague up on the offer, but only for dessert. After that, a movie and Chinese takeout sounds like a perfect day.

Dear Amy: Regarding the conversation prompted by "Stumped in Alabama," I'd like to vote for retiring the label "housewife" and embracing "homemaker." That's what I was, for many years, and I treasure the experience.

– Homemaker

Dear Homemaker:"Homemaker" is nicely descriptive of the domestic experience. Thank you.

Netflix weathers 'Irishman' controversy

By Nick Vivarelli

Despite friction in the U.S. over its release in select cinemas, Martin Scorsese's "The Irishman" is enjoying the biggest theatrical rollout of any Netflix film to date, with key international markets screening the movie and bolstering its profile as awards season gets underway.

The nearly three-and-ahalf-hour mob epic has secured relatively large releases in major overseas territories such as the U.K. and Italy, where opposition to screening Netflix films is proving more muted. It is also being shown in the important Asian markets of Japan and South Korea. Pushback from some exhibitors has, however, sharply curtailed the film's outing in other countries such as Germany and France.

Even after "The Irishman" drops on Netflix's own streaming platform next Wednesday, its theatrical release is expected to continue around the world, including in the U.S., according to several wellplaced sources.

Outside the U.S., Netflix has been working with Glen Basner's FilmNation Entertainment to liaise with local distributors in many countries. It's not a one-size-fits-all approach, as different countries have different windowing rules.

In London and other major British cities, distributor Altitude Films launched "The Irishman" in arthouse theaters through the Everyman and Curzon cinema chains, where the movie has been playing on about 80 screens. "It's really quite a serious footprint," British film industry analyst Angus Finney said, adding: "If Sony Pictures Classics were to release a crossover movie ... this would be the kind of pattern they would hope

Other British theater chains, including Cineworld-owned Picturehouse, Vue and Odeon, turned down "The Irishman" in order to uphold the 90-day window that is standard practice across much of Europe, Finney said. The film's long run time, which makes it almost impossible to squeeze in three screenings per day, was another deterrent.

In Italy, "The Irishman" is playing on about 100 screens via Cineteca di Bologna, the same boutique distributor that last year released "Roma," by Alfonso Cuaron. "Roma's" release caused an uproar among Italian exhibitors at the time, but there haven't been any protests over "The Irishman.'

"Italians are starting to be more serene about the whole Netflix/windows issue," said Italian box office analyst Robert Bernocchi. A Netflix film hitting movie theaters "is no longer this apocalyptic occurrence, as though the future of filmmaking depended on it."

But the issue remains a sensitive one. The heads of Italy's exhibitors and distributors associations both declined to comment. So did Netflix, FilmNation, Altitude and Filmwelt, "The Irishman's" distributor in Germany, where it reached fewer than 50 screens. "Most German exhibitors refused to play the film because they fear losing the window," said Arne Schmidt, spokesman for Hamburg-based premium cinema operator Astor Gruppe, which did not screen Scorsese's film.

Spanish distributor Tripictures, which launched "The Irishman" in about 50 theaters in Spain, also did not reply to a request for comment.

In France, the film has been absent altogether because of the country's 30-month window between a movie's theatrical release and its availability on TV and other outlets. "The Irishman" did have a French premiere last month at the Lumiere Festival in Lyon, which is run by Cannes Film Festival chief Thierry Fremaux, and it also had a gala screening at the Cinematheque Francaise in Paris. But it has gone nowhere else in France.

In Asia, "The Irishman" launched from the Tokyo

Film Festival and is currently in theaters in Japan via Aeon Entertainment. It is also playing in South Korea, on up to roughly 100 screens, via Pancinema. In Australia, the film is being shown in Dendy Cinemas, the only chain exhibitor screening it Down Under.

Whether "The Irishman" will screen in China, where STXInternational is believed to hold the rights, is not yet known. It will not be playing in Middle East movie theaters despite opening the Cairo Film Festival last week.

The international rollout, though small by Hollywood blockbuster standards, is proving a generally smoother affair than "The Irishman's" debut in the U.S. earlier this month, when it opened on just eight screens in New York and L.A. Though it added theaters in the top 10 U.S. markets the following week and has since expanded considerably, John Fithian, president of the National Assn. of Theater Owners, said it was "a disgrace" that an agreement couldn't be reached to put "The Irishman" on more screens.

Whether international exhibitors' greater acceptance of the film heralds a permanent shift in attitude toward Netflix releases remains to be seen. But the streaming giant itself no doubt hopes so. "If everyone would just be calm and talk through it, over the next few years we'll be able to find the right answer for everyone," Netflix film chief Scott Stuber said recently in New York.

Patrick Frater contributed to this report.

Mena

All of this unfolds in about 10 minutes, making "Sukkot" not only a fitting evocation of its namesake holiday but an exuberant curtain-raiser for this evening (or any other).

Conductor Mena offered a robust performance that did not sacrifice details of orchestration that distinguish this score. Even at the end, with the ensemble at full cry, Mena chose clarity over volume, lustrous color over harsh attacks. In so doing, he made a strong case for "Sukkot" — in its first CSO performances as a wholly appealing work.

Holst's "The Planets," which the composer completed in 1916, is much more familiar to concertgoers, its vivid evocations of astrological mysteries having been mimicked by composers famous and obscure. Listening to the piece again, one wondered anew how well "Star Wars" film composer John Williams would have fared without this model.

As in "Sukkot," conductor Mena leaned more toward a sober, literal reading of the score than an intensely dramatic one. The result was a performance a bit less gripping than one might have hoped but majestic in its own right, thanks in large part to the orchestra's virtuosity.

The darkly ominous sections of "Mars, the Bringer of War" and the supple wind choirs of "Venus, the Bringer of Peace" pointed to Mena's sensitivity to color and voicing. Ditto the diaphanous sounds the conductor drew from "Mercury, the Winged Messenger." It was easy to admire the intimacies Mena conjured in "Saturn, the Bringer of Old Age" and the sense of madness he conveyed in "Uranus, the Magician."

The work's most compelling moments emerged in "Neptune, the Mystic," its final movement, the orchestra joining forces with seemingly disembodied voices offstage. To hear the ethereal sounds of the women of the Chicago Symphony Chorus, under the direction of Cheryl Frazes Hill, in tandem with the orchestra's translucent tones was to savor Holst's skill and Mena's control. The concert also featured the first CSO performances of two scenes from Samuel Barber's "Antony and Cleopatra," with soprano Sally Matthews as soloist. Before the piece began, an announcer informed the audience that Matthews would perform "in spite of battling an upper respiratory infection." Yet with the exception of a few passages in which the singer couldn't project above the orchestra's full roar, you hardly would have noticed that she was struggling.

Matthews captured the lyric poetry of "Give me some music," her throaty low notes and sometimes swooping phrases capturing the sensuousness of Barber's writing. In "Give me my robe," Matthews paired emotional expressiveness with interpretive intelligence in portraying the protagonist's demise.

There's nothing weird about Cristela Alonzo's success

By Zach Freeman

"I quit stand-up in 2016 because of the election," comedian Cristela Alonzo told the audience in an especially sober moment towards the end of her set Saturday night at The Vic. Her current "My Affordable Care Act" tour which kicked off last month in New York and ends next month in Phoenix — marks her return to stand-up after three years during which the south-Texas native and first-generation American said she felt selfish doing stand-up when people from her community were strug-

During that time off from comedy, she worked with various advocacy groups and penned the book "Music to My Years: A Mixtape-Memoir of Growing Up and Standing Up,' which was released last month. (A Spanish version will be released in December — "My first language is Spanish. I learned English later on in life," she said.)

Those less familiar with Alonzo the comedian — for a quick primer check out her 2017 Netflix special "Lower Classy" - may recognize her as a guest host on "The View," the voice of Cruz Ramirez from "Cars 3," or as the titular star of the short-lived ABC sitcom "Cristela" (the premiere of "Cristela" in 2014 made Alonzo the first Latina to create, write and star in a network sitcom).

But despite her acting, writing, activism and voiceover work, stand-up is where Alonzo got her start — initially using it as an outlet to grieve the loss of her mother — and where she still shines. Meandering back and forth across the stage Saturday night, with occasional pauses for an act-out towards the crowd, Alonzo maintained an almost perma-grin (she recently got a tooth straightened and said she smiles a lot just to show it off) and a confident air while discussing the pains of aging (she turned 40 in January), the joys of finally having health insurance ("All my life I didn't know I was depressed," she said of finally going to therapy, "I just thought I was poor") and, of course, the results of the 2016 election.

While Alonzo's previous work has certainly contrasted her past and present, this set feels the most cohesive, walking the audience through her childhood in a Texas border town, her college days in St. Louis, the comforts of success and her road to advocacy and memoir writing. "In Los Angeles people always think my story is weird and rare," she said, insisting that it's not and describing her hope that people will read about her life and get a glimpse into a world that's more common than the media might make obvious.

One of Alonzo's biggest strengths is her ability to paint a picture of growing up poor that both honors her past (without sugarcoating it) and provides context for her current view of the world (without bitterness). "When I got health insurance, I started feeling rich," she said at one point, explaining that she got health insurance for the first time only two years ago. "I started buying luxury (stuff). Like food."

She also recounted a lengthy story about how with her newly purchased insurance, she went on her "first check-up ever" and was diagnosed with diabetes at the gynecologist. "How diabetic do you have to be for the vagina doctor to find it?" she wondered.

Her captivating storytelling skills make it clear why her stand-up could translate to the sitcom format so well, but she's also great at setting up catchy, punchier jokes. "I hate hate," she said towards the end of the night, singling out hate groups like the KKK and saying she was planning to start her own group. "Everyone's welcome. Anyone can join," she said. "But it's for Latinos." Then she went in for the kill: "It's a hate hate group. And I call the group the QueQueQue."

After pausing for laughs, she added an additional tag: "Because every time I wake up in the morning I look at the news and I'm like, 'Que?' " Discussing work she's done with activist Dolores Huerta, Alonzo lamented, "She's never gotten the attention she deserves because she's a Mexican woman." Perhaps implicit in that statement is that despite her career and accomplishments in the entertainment industry, Alonzo could just as easily have been talking about herself. "After three years I wonder if people will ... remember me," she said towards the end of her set. Cheers from the mostly full theater made it clear plenty of people do.

Ash

A veteran of the Second City in Toronto and Chicago, Ash isn't particularly guarded or conscious of maintaining an image, which is part of the podcast's appeal. (She will be in Chicago for Second City's annual 24-hour marathon improv benefit, which begins at 5 p.m. Monday: "I'll be there right at the start on the 25th and I'll be doing the first chunk of time," she said.)

Ash relishes the pratfalls of life - her own and that of her guests; the cringier the better, which is what makes the show so relatable — and her tangy enthusiasm is contagious.

That's largely in line with how Beth Kligerman, who heads up casting and alumni relations for Second City, describes Ash's energy overall. "She reads as full of moxie and full of confidence in a way that is such a delight to me. It's that combination of confidence and vulnerability." Those twin qualities are on display every week on the podcast, giving it a fun, dishy, conversational kick Ash is a deceptively skillful raconteur - while also being grounded in something recognizably

Each episode is centered around a loose theme. "It's like an improv suggestion," said Ash. "Any theme can spin out a bigger story." This week's episode has the theme "Invited, But Not Really" and Ash talks with another "Superstore" co-star, Nico Santos, about a celebrity telethon they participated in several years back. It was organized by Jennifer Lopez, among others, to raise funds for Puerto Rico and the roster of famous people on hand to take donations included Kim Kardashian, Ellen De-Generes and Tyler Perry and then there were Ash and Santos. Ash: "Like now, Season 5, I feel like I could go onto that phone bank and feel a little bit more confident. But at the time it was like, I would answer the calls and be like: 'Hi, this is Lauren Ash, I play a character called Dina on a show called "Superstore."

Santos: "That's exactly what I was doing and people were so pissed! 'Who are vou?'

Later that night, they went to Lopez's palatial estate for an awkward, sparsely attended pizza party, which is its own story. (Santos also tells a hilarious story about him and boyfriend Zeke Smith, a "Survivor" alum, finding themselves at a "Survivor" party at Angelina Jolie's house.)

On an episode featuring

guest Marque Richardson (of the Netflix series "Dear White People"), the theme is "Stranger Encounters," and Ash talks about rarely being conscious of having any level of celebrity and then suddenly being confronted with it:

"There's always that layer. For example, I'll go on a date with somebody I met on an app and when I get there I realize he's a superfan of my show. And it's something that never entered my mind ... When you have that slow burn of a career and you're not super famous at 20, I feel like it's not second nature to think: Oh, I have to think about things differently now."

She then offers an anecdote that speaks to something I've always been curious about:

"I have to get better about it too, because I've had some instances. Postmates, for example. I didn't even answer the door, my friend answered the door, and they said, 'Tell Lauren I love her on "Superstore." 'And I was like, first of all, if you're never used Postmates, it only lists your first name and has a tiny teeny picture of you. And I'm like, the fact that they were able to figure out that was me, make the connection and now also have my home address ... "

You don't often hear actors open up about this facet of their lives.

"Listen, I was a teenager who was fascinated by what this world is and wanted to potentially be part of it in some way," she said in our interview. "So I have always been fascinated by what the lives of actors are like and what does the day-to-day look like. Celebrity is titillating for a million reasons, right? So I think that's a fun part of it. This job that we do is weird. It's a very specific, odd industry to be a part of on many levels. When you're starting out, it's got a series of interesting quirks. And as you become more successful, those quirks just change."

In an episode with comedian and Chicago native Jimmy Pardo, the theme is "Nerdgasms" (pop culture they are obsessed with). Pardo's choice is the band Chicago and he talks about meeting Peter Cetera on the street and realizing that Cetera relaxed once he recognized Pardo's name, because in that shift they were now interacting as

ries about their lives. "I think there can be something to that, honestly," said Ash. "It's like when you meet someone at a party where, I don't know you but I know of you and there's a comfort level already in that. It's not just a random crazy person — or somebody whose job it is, like a journalist, to try to ask probing questions. And if people have any kind of previous knowledge of who I am, they get it. It's not like I'm trying to trap anybody or really dig deep and get real personal. It's more that it's like: Hey, this is a fun thing." Upcoming guests include "Supernatural's" Rob Benedict (Ash is such an ardent fan of the show that she recently attended a fan convention), "Survivor's" Zeke Smith, "Saturday Night Live" alum Kevin Nealon, comedian Fortune Feimster and yet another pal from "Superstore," Jon Barinholtz (a Chicago native and younger brother of Ike Barinholtz).

Each episode ends with two segments. The first is called Dumb Lies We Tell: Ash will read an email submitted by a listeners at dumblieswetell@gmail.com, and she and her guest recounts examples from their own lives. And then she wraps with a segment called Never Let Go, wherein she and her guest tell a story about the grudges they hold.

The podcast offers such a clear delineation between Ash the person (upbeat, chatty, supportive) and "Superstore's" Dina, who is the walking embodiment of schadenfreude. They're as different as night and day except when Ash starts talking grudges.

She laughed at that. "That is the dichotomy of me, for real. I am a grudge-holder, I think it's part of my loyal nature. I will go to the ends of the earth for you, but if you wrong me or if you wrong somebody I love, then you're dead to me forever."

Ultimately, she just likes to talk. On the podcast, she said, she'll find herself recounting a story "and then I'm like, oh my God, why? I promised myself I wouldn't talk about this, why am I doing this? But there's something about the nature of connecting with somebody and really enjoying their company that makes you want to share, if that makes any

"So it's been a really fun creative process, and I've been impressed by how open people have been willing to be and just how game they are for what the podcast is."

production of Disney's Beauty and the Beast" in that context. The Paramount's homegrown series of musicals, which have been very successful, has as its calling card family-friendly entertainment. No theater has focused so rigorously on the desires of its audience. This means programing that might not make for the most exciting or revelatory evenings for critics like me (I've heard Belle say "Bonjour!" and seen that nasty hairy beastie change into a dazed-buthandsome dude enough times to make my head spin), but that overachieves when it comes to the big night out. The Paramount attracts folks who need the comfort of a familiar title because they just want the guarantee of spending some quality (and affordable) time with those they love. And if anyone tells you there is anything wrong with that, they don't understand how a lifelong love of the arts almost always begins that way. Thus this review was, you might argue, somewhat compromised by the close proximity of some young theater-goers whose mouths fell open often at Jeffrey D. Kmiec's fairytale design. Kmiec's work here is really something; it's far enough away from the original concept to feel fresh but not so radical as to fight the structure of the show. It's more classy than cartoony. And, best of all, Kmiec layers his goodies. At one point, the royalty in my row went gaga for a shimmering chandelier that Kmiec flies in just before the romantic couple have the big date that so enthralls Chip (Aaliyah Montana, at opening), only for Mrs. Potts (Jennie Sophia) to stick him back in the cupboard.

lighting designer, Jesse Klug, have baked scores of shimmering diodes into pretty much every wall and staircase, allowing his beastland to sparkle like Cinderella's castle. No need for all the hassle of Orlando. That, friends, is giving people what they came to see, and without busting their budgets for presents.

Paramount's "Beauty" is far and away the biggest local staging of this show and, to date, far and away the best, thanks to be some very experienced artists in its cast. It is beautifully sung, especially by Emmett O'Hanlon, who plays Gaston, and Paul-Jordan Jansen, who plays the prince; I was tickled how dazed and confused Jansen appeared after his infamous reinvention, avoiding the climactic preening of so many beasts of my prior acquaintance.

But what matters most is the heartfelt tone of the show, which some productions have gotten spectacularly wrong. Not only is Beth Stafford Laird all-in, all night, but the scenes between her Belle and her pops (Ron Rains) are very touching, as is old Cogsworth (George Keating), realizing with his old pal Lumiere (Jackson Evans) that his worst fears have not come true. The princess-dress crowd probably won't get that, and let's hope they don't for years to come, but their parents

WATCH THIS: MONDAY

Rome Flynn

"A Christmas Duet" (7 p.m., Hallmark): Averie Davis (Chaley Rose) is stressed to the max when her business partner, Susie (Chiara Zanni), is forced to go on pregnancy leave just as their inn prepares to welcome a big Yuletide Festival and one of its eminent judges (Teryl Rothery). Things take an even wilder turn, when the big event faces a fiscal crisis, just as Averie's old flame Jesse Collins (Rome Flynn) checks in during a tour.

"Holiday Baking Championship" (8 p.m., 11 p.m., Food): Host Jesse Palmer opens the new Thanksgiving episode "Trendsetting Turkey Day" by assigning the seven remaining bakers to use baked Brie and jam mini-pies to elevate a familiar and popular holiday appetizer. In the main heat, the bakers take a prepared ingredient and incorporate it in a crowd-pleasing Thanksgiving dessert. After sampling their work, judges Duff Goldman, Nancy Fuller and Lorraine Pascale send one baker home.

"Wrap Battle" (8 p.m., FREE): Nine talented gift wrappers compete to become the Wrap Battle Champion and win a grand prize worth $50,000 in this six-episode free-spirited holiday competition series, which airs two back-to-back episodes each week. Comic Sheryl Underwood ("The Talk") hosts the proceedings, with Carson Kressley ("RuPaul's Drag Race") and fine stationery businesswoman Wanda Wen serving as judges. Guest judges include producer Candy Spelling, actors Sherry Cola, Lala Kent and Diggy Simmons, Sandra Lee and Sabrina

"Prodigal Son" (8:01 p.m., FOX): Malcolm (Tom Payne) finds himself with unexpected time on his hands, now that his father (Michael Sheen) is in solitary confinement and the FBI has taken over the Junkyard Killer case, so he decides to try having a "normal" lifestyle in the new episode "Pied-A-Terre." Things are going pretty well, too, until he accepts a challenge to profile his date. Meanwhile, his police colleagues track a new murder that leads them to an underground sex club. Molly Griggs, Kristen Connolly and Mara Davi guest star.

TALK SHOWS

"Conan" (10 p.m. 11:30 p.m., TBS): Conan visits various sites throughout the country and brings along fan favorite show staffer Jordan Schlansky; he takes a whirlwind road trip to meet the people and enjoy Italian food and culture; Conan appears on an Italian soap opera.3

"The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon" (10:34 p.m., NBC): Actress Daisy Ridley; actor Tom Hiddleston; author Michael Eric Dyson; Noah Cyrus and Leon Bridges perform.*

"The Late Show With Stephen Colbert" (10:35 p.m., CBS): The comic interviews guests and introduces musical performances.*

GAHAN WILSON 1930-2019

Cartooning's master of the creepy

BY MATT SCHUDEL The Washington Post

The Latin word for left-handed is "sinister." Few artists of the late 20th century portrayed the sinister side of life — the monstrous, the macabre and the just plain creepy with as much panache and malevolent glee as Gahan Wilson, who (it goes without saying) was left-han-

A cartoonist whose work haunted the pages of Playboy, the New Yorker and National Lampoon for decades, Wilson died Nov. 21 in Scottsdale, Arizona. He was 89.

His death was announced by a stepson, Paul Winters. The cause was complications from dementia.

Wilson, whose first name was pronounced Gay-un, had a distinctive drawing style and, in the words of novelist Neil Gaiman, "a cockeyed, dangerously weird way of looking at the world."

In Wilson's cartoons, childhood fears came vividly to life, surrealistic monsters lurked around every corner, and every prognosis was grim.

"Life is a grotesque thing, inexplicable, odd," he told The Washington Post in 1976. "It doesn't make any sense. I'm always into the fantastic, the grotesque and certainly the frighten-

His first published cartoon, from 1954, depicted a boy and his father in a blizzard. The boy points at the frozen corpse of a bird, its feet and beak poking out of the snow, and says, "Look, Daddy, the first robin.

In some of Wilson's cartoons, creatures with bared teeth and bulging eyes crouch at the foot of a child's bed or behind a half-opened door. At times, they become visible only in X-rays, as when one doctor says to another: "It is as I suspected — Mr. Harding, here, is possessed by demons."

In a 1968 cartoon that typified Wilson's humor, a married couple walk down a street. The husband's head resembles a green shrimp with tentacles.

"Harry," the man's wife says, "I really think you ought to go to the doctor." In the late 1950s, Wilson began to publish his work in Playboy, whose publisher and editor, Hugh Hefner, had early ambitions to be a cartoonist. Wilson's full-page cartoons, often suffused in gloomy shades of brown and green, became a monthly feature in the magazine and were often reprinted in books.

"Gahan Wilson was an immediate hit with our readers and a perfect contrast to our usual, more sexual cartoon fare," Hefner wrote in the introduction to a 2011 collection, "Gahan Wilson: 50 Years of Playboy Cartoons." Wilson occasionally touched on risque subjects, but his best work for Playboy — and later for the New Yorker, Esquire and other publications — grew out of his diabolical, Wizard of Odd sensibility. Cars grew teeth and began talking, oven doors popped open with a pair of eyes peering out.

"I see a cartoon as a kind of mini-short story," Wilson told The Post in 1989. "If it's any good, you see with no effort what led up to this episode, and what's probably going to happen after."

A 1968 cartoon showed a rocky seascape, with a painting of the same scene on an easel — except that the painting shows two eyes of a huge monster rising from the water. A closer look reveals that the artist is nowhere to be seen, leaving only his hat, brushes and palette behind. In a cartoon without a caption, a man is in a restroom, beneath a sign reading "Employees Must Wash Hands," when he looks over at a restaurant worker casually scrubbing a tub full of disembodied hands.

"He liked to depict ordinary folks encountering some kind of anxious terror, or experiencing the unthinkable in mundane places," New Yorker cartoonist Michael Maslin wrote on the magazine's website. "Wilson's art is both the heart-thumping you feel when you dare look under the bed and the relieved inner laugh you let loose after he's scared the pants off of you."

Gahan Allen Wilson was born Feb. 18, 1930, in Evanston, Illinois. His father was a steel-company executive, his mother a publicist for a department store.

As an only child, he enjoyed carnival side shows and the movies of comedian W.C. Fields, whom he cited as a formative influence, along with Dutch painter Hieronymous and cartoonists Charles Addams and Chester Gould, creator of the "Dick Tracy" comic

Wilson began drawing at an early age, graduated from the Art Institute of Chicago in 1952, then moved to New York. In addition to his work for Playboy, the New Yorker and Esquire, Wilson had a regular multi-panel strip, "Nuts," in National Lampoon in the 1970s. A bizarro takeoff of Charles Schulz's "Peanuts," it featured an unnamed boy and was drawn from a child's perspective, both visually and emotionally.

Wilson published more than two dozen books, including cartoon collections, graphic novels and books for children. He also wrote reviews of horror and fantasy books and was a founder of the World Fantasy Convention.

His wife of 52 years, writer Nancy Winters, died in March. Survivors include two stepsons; eight grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

If there was a prototypical Gahan Wilson cartoon, it may have been one that appeared in Playboy in 1964, showing a bearded skeleton in a Santa Claus suit lying crumpled in a fireplace.

"Well," a worker tells a wide-eyed matron, "we found out what's been clogging your chimney since last December, Miss

More than 20 years later, Wilson told The Post, "That got more angry mail than anything I ever did. You can mess around with religion, but when you kill off Santa Claus, there's an uproar. You never know."

Elizabeth, you are my best friend and my everything! Through you God has given my life an extraordinary purpose I could never accomplish on my own. Your love makes me want to be the best man I can be, and I know that I bring out your best you. "We have come so far my dear. Look how we have grown. I want to stay with you until we are grey and old." When you realize you want to spend the rest of your life with the person you love, you want the rest of your life to start as soon as possible. And now that God has made it clear to both of us, I cannot wait to begin our life together. I love you with all my heart and soul. Elizabeth, will you make me the happiest man alive by doing me the honor of becoming my wife?

Weather in Chicago at the end of November can be fickle. Official records dating back to 1872 show daytime high temperatures have ranged from as high as 69 degrees, to as low as 14. About 43% of Thanksgivings have been dry, while snow has been observed nearly 28% of the time. Thursday promises to be dry and seasonably cool. Sunday marked only the fifth time this November that the temperature has reached 50 degrees. With partial sunshine and a continuing southwest breeze, readings on Monday are forecast to pass the 50-degree threshold for a second day, marking the first time that's happened since Nov. 3 and 4. Mild air may make two more brief visits before the end of the month. Readings could spike into the 50s Tuesday evening, and again late Saturday or Saturday eve-

TUESDAY, NOV. 26

46 41 Peeks of sun early, then clouds lower. Patchy rain develops in the afternoon. Heavier, widespread rain and embedded t-storms through the evening as temps jump to the 50s. Rain ends, turning colder by morning.

28 Ragged low clouds bring spotty sprinkles or flurries in the morning, then clouds decrease. Blustery and colder W-NW winds 25-35 mph and gusty diminish late. Temps hold around 40 degrees. Fair, but colder overnight.

THURSDAY, NOV. 28

High pressure builds across the area making for a chilly, but dry Thanksgiving. Filtered sun emerges through rather extensive mid-high clouds. N-NE winds 10-15 mph may bring some lake clouds inland.

FRIDAY, NOV. 29

Clouds thicken and lower as another storm brews over the plains. Turning windy and raw. Rain, possibly beginning as snow or sleet, becomes likely by evening. Temps peak near 40 degrees. E-SE winds 20-25 mph.

SATURDAY, NOV. 30

Showers, ongoing at daybreak, continue into midday. Windy and milder. Temps may briefly reach 50 degrees in spots. SE winds 20-30 mph shift SW. Turning colder at night with a chance of flurries late.

32

SUNDAY, DEC. 1

Blustery and colder. Peeks of sun emerge at times, otherwise cloudy. Some intermittent light snow or flurries. Temps struggle to reach the mid-upper 30s. Winds becoming NW 20-30

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

What effects on our weather does the location of Chicago on Lake Michigan have?

Georgia Callus. Morton Grove

Dear Georgia,

The effects are profound. Some of those effects, like cooling lake breezes during the summer and lake-effect snows during the winter, are obvious. Others, while more significant, are not so generally realized. Our proximity to the Great Lakes also results in cooler summers and milder winters; more overall cloudiness and a longer duration of unsettled weather with showers/ flurries in the wake of departing low pressure systems; higher average winds; fewer spring thunderstorms, and, in a corridor from southwest Wisconsin to northern Indiana, a tendency for more severe weather and for heavy "training thunderstorm" events.
